THEIR SIDE OF THE STORY THE TEMAGAMI RAILWAY

Superintendent's Report of the Accident to the Train Bearing Pittsburg Capitalists.

Editor World: I notice an article in your issue of Aug. 3 headed, "Pittsburgers Purchased Properties in Cobalt," the latter part of which has reference to a slight accident on our line.

I enclose you herewith copy of the report of our superintendent in the matter, in connection with this matter, and I should be glad if you would be good enough to publish same in the columns of your paper. Thanking you in anticipation, H. W. Pearson, Secretary-Treasurer, Toronto, Aug. 8, 1906.

North Bay, Ont., Aug. 6, 1906.
Mr. C. B. Smith, Chairman, Toronto: Dear Sir,—I have noticed in The Toronto World a report of an accident to special train running from Cobalt to Temagami on July 29, and I beg leave to give you particulars in connection therewith.

The party on this car were ticketed to the party on this car, and left on our train No. 3, Sunday, July 29, changed their plans and requested that they be taken to New Liskeard, for which they were charged. On the 29th they were taken to Argente Sidling on our morning local, lifted on the evening local for Cobalt. They made request at Cobalt that the evening local be run through with them to Temagami, which we refused to do, unless they paid us $10, our charge for same, which they refused to do, but after local had departed, decided that they would pay this amount. To assist them in their movements, I took engine off train No. 11 and ran their car to Temagami, leaving Cobalt 7:05 p.m. When at mileage 100 1-2 at 7:12 p.m., engine running tender first became derailed and ran a short piece on the ties. As you know, air-brake is of little effect once engine gets on the ties. Private car at no time was derailed; engineer making a very quiet stop, not even spilling the tea that conductor had poured out for himself in his caboose.

When they arrived at Temagami.

There is only one way to permanently cure catarrh. Inhale the soothing vapors of "Catarrhons," and swift, lasting cure follows in every case. Try "Catarrhons" yourself; it's pleasant and sure.

some of the party next morning went for a sail on the lake. I had our agent enquire if they wished to come down on train No. 4 of July 31, and he was unable to get any information from those on the car. After our train No. 4 had gone they made up their minds that they should have gone on that train, and started to make quite a row; in fact, one of the party abused our agent at that point most shamefully, using language worse, if anything, than would be heard in any low saloon. I had a work train on the way down and lifted them on this work train to North Bay, making request of the Grand Trunk at the same time to hold, which was kindly complied with.

Train No. 4 would certainly have taken their car from Temagami to North Bay had they even hinted to our Temagami agent that they wanted to go.

The party sent from Temagami messages to several papers in the United States, which were utterly wrong. We are prepared to substantiate by responsible witnesses all of the statements that we make. Yours truly, (Signed) J. H. Black, Superintendent.

The World's report of the accident was from conversation with members of the Pittsburg party.

A Secret.
I took her hand in mine exactly as do we in greeting friends or strangers. When we meet, and she took mine in that same way, unwittingly. Then I thought, what I held, so soft it was, and shy, and pressed it gently; just enough to send a message to her. As from friend to friend. No more than that; and she—ah, well! If she had squeezed my hand I would not tell.—The Bohemian.

Spoke No III.
An English barrister named Huddleston, a general favorite of the bar, was the butt of many jokes. A great dandy, he always wore a powdered wig and white kid gloves in court. He was somewhat egotistical, and during a general criticism of him some one said in his defence: "At all events, you never hear him speak ill of anybody." "No," rejoined Ballantine, a brother barrister, "but the reason is that he never speaks of anybody but himself."

Evened Up.
The heir who's left a fortune fat, it may be safely stated, grows dissolute because of that. But soon the fortune—'t for fat—is also dissipated.

The Kind He Was.
"That man is very exacting in his attachments."
"One of the wearing kind of friends and lovers, hey?"
"Not at all. He is a sheriff."—Baltimore American.

EXPERT GIVES ADVICE WOMEN IN ALPINE ROLE

Aubrey Le Blond, Asserts That Tasks Depend on Nerve and Health.

Mrs. Aubrey Le Blond, the author of "My Home in the Alps," on being asked if women should climb mountains, said: "When I am asked—and I often am asked—'Should women climb?' I reply, 'Should women drive motors?' and I add, 'It depends on the woman.' What this alone can do has been proved on many occasions, and strikingly in the case of Mlle. d'Angerville, the second woman to ascend Mont Blanc. It was nearly a century ago, and the ambition of this elderly lady had for years been to reach the snowy dome of the giant of the Alps.

Other Women Climbers.
"One good guide and a clumsy porter formed the escort, and as the guide had to go first to choose the way, it fell to the porter's lot to bring up the rear, but he proved worse than useless; so I left the porter to go on his own, and I followed the other face of a precipice the little band at last came safely to the bottom, and learned the same night, to the utter amazement, that they had made the passage of the dreaded Sesia, Joch.

"Within our own times one of the most distinguished lady climbers has been Miss Kate Richardson, to whom belongs the credit of being the first lady to ascend the Meije. The Meije is 13,000 feet high in the Dauphine Alps, and for years it defied all attempts to gain its summit. So difficult was the climb that none of the early successful parties managed to get off its formidable cliffs before nightfall, and one still notices scattered along the route stones from top to bottom, low walls and ledges cleared of stones, the sleeping quarters of various shivering climbers who failed to descend by daylight and dared not move afterwards.

"But it is not only Englishwomen who have become successful mountaineers. Holland it was who sent Frau Imminck to the Dolomites, and this intrepid woman, not content with tackling the most difficult peaks in Europe in summer, has also been up more than one in winter. From the States we have Mrs. Bullock Workman whose operations in the Himalayas are too well known to need further mention, and of whom we are soon to hear more.

Was Herculean Task.
"At last the moment came when she could set out, and accompanied by a vast assemblage of guides and porters she set out on her journey. The task was a herculean task. All went well till she reached the Grand Plateau, a stretch of snow-covered glacier scattered along the summit. Here for the first time her strength gave out. She was nearly suffocated from the rarity of the air. Her eyelids dropped in overpowering sleep. The guides thought she could go no farther, and in truth her bodily forces were practically exhausted. But her will power remained, and making a supreme effort she exclaimed: 'Promise me that if I die on the way you will carry me to the top!' and the guides, astounded by her determination, could only reply, 'Oui, mademoiselle!'"

"The plucky lady arrived, however, in due course, and once there all fatigue vanished as if by magic. A quadrille was danced, and then the hero-line was lifted on the shoulder of the
