WILLAGE IMPROVEMENT SOCIETIES.

An American writer recently offered some valuable advice to the residents procession in the way, "'Does yez want to cross?' says a of villages, especially those contiguous to the larger cities. Since the trolley system has brought these villages into close communication with the cities, and since the bicycle has enabled the residents of the town to visit and enjoy the beauties of the country it has joy the beauties of the country it has consible for city residents to become possible for city residents to pass the hot months of summer in some quiet retreat, six, ten, or even twenty miles from the scene of their daily labors. The writer referred to points out that villages which are situated near cities ought to make an effort to secure a summer population of city people. To accomplish this, he recommends the organization of village improvement societies. These societies should be composed of as many should be the providing of conveni-ences such as city people are used to at home, and the natural beautifica-tion of the locality. Village residents,
