

GEORGE CHANDLER LEARNED ENOUGH ABOUT ELECTRICITY TO SURPRISE HIS COMPANIONS.

George Chandler learned enough about electricity to surprise his companions. He was isolated from the ground they can grasp a trolley wire without injury, providing they touch no other wire. So the boys often succeeded in making and grasping wires without harm, much to the surprise of his companions below.

BUT WENT BEYOND HIS DEPTH.

George Chandler went beyond his depth. He mounted the trolley pole, which stood almost in front of his house. He had a wire in his hand, and this he threw over the cross-arm of the pole, George swung in the air and his feet were held by the heavy bars which support the trolley pole.
