VANCOUVER AS A GRAIN PORT. According to the fifteenth annual report of the Vancouver Board of Trade for the year 1901-1902, the people of the Pacific coast city, tho not experiencing a boom, are confident of the future. The population has not yet reached the 30,000 mark, but the town is growing. The value of new buildings constructed last year, altho not so great as in the preceding year, is still very considerable. There were actually commenced during the year, not to speak of unfinished buildings, which were under construction at the end of 1900, new buildings to the the city is solidly built, and includes numerous fine structures. There was likewise a decline in the export lumber trade, but the rapid filling up of the Northwest Territories is causing an increased demand for lumber in that direction. There was recorded, however, a remarkable development of the fishing industry of the province. The total salmon pack for 1901 aggregated 1,236,156 cases, against 585,443 cases in 1900, and 732,-437 cases in 1899. The American ports of Tacoma and Portland owe a very large measure of their prosperity to the handling of the grain cargoes there loaded, and this industry also brings in its train a corresponding volume of trade in ships supplies of all kinds which would be of great value to our merchants."
