IMPERIAL DEFENCE.

On Tuesday Senator G. W. Ross moved a resolution proposing that liberal provision be made at once for the instruction of Canadian mariners in seamanship and navigation, with the double object of developing the shipping interests of Canada, and, if need be, the protection of Canadian commerce in coastal waters and on the high seas. In his speech he alluded to the small amount now being spent in aid of Canadian shipping and pointed out that with the exception of Great Britain Canada had the greatest number of fishermen of any country in the world. The number enrolled last year was no less than 71,354, or half the number required to man the British Navy, and that the number of men served in the United States fleet during the Spanish-American War.

Also after the remarks made by Sir Richard Cartwright, Senator Ross withdrew his resolution, the facts as stated show that it will not be difficult for Canada to take its part in Imperial defence without encroaching in the least on that principle of local self-government which is so valued by Canadians.

The suggestion will no doubt be considered during the coming conference between the British Government and the Canadian representatives. Men properly trained are really the most essential of a powerful navy, and rank before ships and guns. These latter are easily got if the necessary money is available, but it is more difficult to provide efficient crews. The creation of a really good naval reserve is certainly one of the most effective ways by which Imperial defence can be aided and strengthened. It has, too, the additional advantage of being a necessary preparation for that Canadian navy which must come. When the map of the world is studied and the disposition of the Imperial states, it can be seen that there is a natural basis of support as between the United Kingdom and the other British states. Britain commands the Atlantic and its branches; Canada, Australia and New Zealand are deeply concerned in the Pacific. South Africa is the connecting link and a strategic point of immense importance should the Suez Canal be blocked. The United States again is also a Pacific power whose interests are identical, and this was at once recognized in Australia. Such a division of responsibility may not be possible at the present stage of Imperial development, but it is every year coming more and more within the bounds of the attainable.

CONSERVATION OF NATURAL RESOURCES.

No one will question the advisability of creating a permanent commission charged with the conservation of the natural resources of Canada. The future of the country depends on this and a really representative body possessed of the requisite powers and properly composed will be in a position to render invaluable service. Everything depends on the nature of the commission, the extent of its responsibility, the calibre of its members and the confidence it can engender in the provinces.

There ought to be some general principle of administration in the matter of our natural resources. They should be controlled with careful consideration for Canadian interests and for the purpose of aiding the growth of Canadian industries. The success that has attended the policy adopted by Ontario as regards its timber, and the resultant increase in local manufacture, affords a valuable indication of what could be accomplished in other and equally important directions. Much, however, hangs on the initiation of a truly national policy and the value of a powerful commission in its formulation can hardly be under-estimated.

SOCIAL EVOLUTION.

Comment is made by Bytander on the difference of temperament in France and England, as exemplified by the attitude of the two peoples under circumstances of revolution. In England, after two revolutions, the people speedily settled down to regular government. "There is," he continues, "a very visible danger of such a triumph of the revolutionary and socialist spirit under the forms of the republic as would practically amount to revolution, and might lead once more to a grand catastrophe." "For what system will they," the French working classes, he asks, "not have a profound contempt, if it fails to transfer the good things of this world from the present possessors to themselves?"

The course of evolution in social and political affairs, even in retrospect, is one of the most mysterious developments of the great principle now recognized in all pastures of life and activity. To forecast the course of social evolution is one of the pastimes of the more or less philosophical. But it is quite conceivable that, provided the aim suggested of an equalization of opportunity be in accordance with the cosmic plan, or the nature of things, or the Divine will, as various thinkers would severely express it, this benevolent order could be brought about in due course without any violence, by such gentle accommodation to conditions and necessities as may be observed in many spheres.

Sociologists might seize hold of the Ontario Government plan of cheapening school books as an example of how the law of evolution can work out such a problem. Many elements are involved in the solution of this question, and even radical thinkers who are supposed to be familiar with all the aspects of social and political economy failed to perceive the possibilities of the situation. The departmental store is a product of the age, and at the same time an evolution from the root idea of the country general store. Such institutions grow naturally, and the printing press, with its many voices, give them breath and life. At the basis of all social communication lies the principle of exchange. Nothing is to be had for nothing. The big store assists in the equalization of prices, and to that extent partakes in the redistribution of wealth, so generally desired. If, by giving cheap school books it receives costly advertising, then the further distribution of cheap commodities is maintained. This is in itself a step towards the achievement of a practical socialism.

FIGHT IN COURT ROOM

License Inspector and Accused Barber Have a Tussle.

MIDLAND, April 28.—W. O. Fisher of Orillia, license inspector for East Simcoe, had a rough and tumble fight in the court room this morning with Joseph Peake, barber, of this town, who had been summoned on charges of illegal sale of liquor. On April 10 the inspector, with Chief of Police Bell, searched the premises occupied by Peake as a hair shop and discovered one bottle of whiskey in a cheese box in a hallway back of the shop, and in the cellar 23 empty bottles. Last week the hearing was postponed, when it was found that two of 13 prominent citizens to be summoned as witnesses had not been properly served. None were called today.

Peake has charged Fisher with assault, and this will be heard next Monday.

As J. George Fredericks says, "The Underwood typewriter has had striking success in the typewriter field. If it had not been for the panic last year, its factories, even though they have been largely increased, would have failed to keep up with orders. Success has come to this Company on a silver platter. It put a fine visible writing machine on the market, and held patent rights which allowed it to sit on the one best way to make a visible writer. People begged for Underwoods, and the Company promised to do its best to supply them." Fredericks is the editor of "Printers' Ink," and what "Printers' Ink" says is always pretty close to the mark.

His engagement in the big New York playhouse made it possible to devise the most natural presentation imaginable. More than two hundred apparatuses are used during each performance. Many of these are so simple that patent rights will not protect the exhibitor. According to the duties of the chief inspector met yesterday afternoon, and will report to the management committee.
