Would Make New Wedding Laws As a means of checking the growing tendency of marriage among immature young men and women, and its attendant evils, Magistrate Robert C. Cornell, of the Domestic Relations Court, came out this week with a plan designed to forbid unious of this kind, except under the most stringent conditions ent conditions.

It is a recognized fact with those who are familiar with the conditions; that at least seventy-five per cent, if not more, of the hasty marriages made between young people result unhappily; that nearly fifty per cept. end in the divorce courts, and more would if such a course could be afforded."

and more would it such a course could be afforded."

"It is getting so nowadays," said the judge, "that a boy of nineteen may marry a girl of sixteen and the authorities are none the wiser until about a year afterward when the youthful couple, tired at playing "keep house," come to this court for aid.

"This condition of affairs is not only a reflection on the parents and their laxity in caring for their children, but it is also a disgrace to the city government, and I believe that unless it is stoled the city will be so overrun with families poor and discontented, that it will be the laughing stock of the country.

"It would be an excellent thing if a law was passed making it necessary for the contemplated marriage to be published a month in advance of the time of the wedding.

"Such a law would guard the children in two ways. It would make possible the interference of the parent or guardian if the marriage was ill advised, and it would also give the foolish children a month in which to think over the situation. Many of these marriages would not take place if the young people were compelled to wait a month.

"There is practically no love in a hasty wait a month.

"There is practically no love in a hasty marriage of this kind. If you sat in this court for a few days you would soon discover this to be a fact. There never had been love, just a fleeting affection, and that very thin. Love is an ill-used word, and in almost nine cases out of ten of this kind that are brought before me it has never been known."

Divorcees and Society

With the frequent denials and re-iterations of the story cabled here almost daily concerning the proposed rfeturn of the Duchess of Marlborough and Mrs. Ava Willing Astor, the divorced wife of John Jacob Astor, and sister-in-law of William Waldorf Astor, the friends of the two women are much confused. The crux of all the reports sent from England attribute to the two divorced women a sense of humiliation over the apparent disposition to treat them slightingly because of their domestic troubles.

When she went abroad last fall, Mrs. Astor, who was reputed to have received a $10,000,000 settlement from Colonel Astor, announced that she would make London her home in the future. Now she is said to have written to some of her old friends expressing her chagrin over the way things are going in that city since Queen Mary publicly snubbed her and to be anxious to return here permanently. If she does come back with any such purpose in view, society here is of the opinion that it will not be long before she re-marries. This it is believed would materially strengthen her position in society and furnish her with the protection she now lacks.

So far as the Duchess of Marlborough,

So far as the Duchess of Marlborough, So far as the Duchess of Mariborough, (Consuela Vanderbilt) is concerned, pittle stock is placed in the cablegrams stating that she, too, is to make her home again in New York. Should she do this, she would be obliged to give up control of her children, to whom she is devoted. This she would not do for anything. So that whether or not her social status abroad is as agreeable as she would like it, it is settled that she will stay there and make the best of it, however jarring it may be the best of it, however jarring it may be

Wm. K. Vanderbilt, Jr.

However strained their relations may be, it is apparent from a document filed this week, that William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and his wife, who was Virginia Fair, of San Francisco, have not completely broken all intercourse with each other.
