WHO TOOK IT?

"Will you take charge of £20 till toorrow morning, Marian?"
"Take charge of £20, Harold" echo-

I settled myself down to an explana-tion. Explanations are things I hate, nevertheless they are necessary some-times. One was due on this occasion. nevertheless they are necessary sometimes. One was due on this occasion. "You know, my dear Marian," I began, with a business-like air, "that the failure of Hardinge Brothers threw scores of men, women and children in this neighborhood out of work, in the very hardest part of a very bad year. This evening a meeting was held, with a view to enlisting the sympathy of the public. A subscription list was got up, and a collection made there and then to the tune of £20. As nothing else could best physicians of Boston had taken my case in hand.

On consultation between several of the leading physicians, they concluded my complaint was sthma and general debility. I had great difficulty in breathing and an inhaler was required to afford me breath. Through the treatment of one physician is took from 75 to 100 boxes of calomelpills, and faithfully tried all the medicine that each physician prescribed. From my long sickness, and the vast amount of medicine two everomes the great pain, my kidney a became badly affected, and I sufficed excruciating pain in the small of my back, with great difficulty in passing my urine.

One physician self I was diseased all through my system, and he regretted that he could give me no-hope for health. Hy suffering from indigestion was so great that it was impossible to keep any solid food on my stomach, and the whole nature of my food was broth from catmeal.

I also took a prescription from a celebrated English physician, who said my trouble was Brondits and Dyspepsia. I took is bottless of medicine especially prepared for Dyspepsia, and I have used a great deal of medicine from apothecaries' prescription. I have taken Saraparilla until you could count the bottless by the dozen, and indeed. I have given nearly all the popular advertised modicine a fair trial I had a dreadful cough, and did not average over two hours' sleep a night for 8 years.

A brother policeman urged me to try Vezering.

you until I get rid of it."

"And so free your mind from all responsibility," added my wife, with a smile. She knew that one of my chief weaknesses was a dread of responsibility. smile. She knew that one of my chief weaknesses was a dread of responsibility.

We immediately went into a consultation as to where the money should be put. I suggested the meat-safe, as a place to which thieves would never dream of going for money, but my wife pooh-poohed the idea, as well as several other suggestions of mine, which I thought were not so bad. At last an idea struck her in the shape of the winedrawer, in the cupboard of the ideboard. By this means the money would be doubly safe, she argued, for the drawer might first be locked, in addition to locking the door. I looked rather contemptuously on the plan, for, if the text hand I delay in the contempt of the idea to the contempt of the plan, for, if the text hand I delay it were not, if the text hand I delay it were not into locking the door. and the pound easy now that all danger was over, that I began to laugh at my nervous fears. How stupid it would have been to have gone down stairs in the middle of such a bitter night! Thank goodness I had been strong-minded enough for that. I fell off into another doze, and, as a natural consequence, was late for breakfast. That meal was a hurried one, and when it was over, and I had my cost and hat on, ready to start off to an important case, I reminded Marian of the money; and begged her to get it out quickly.

"I had quite forgotten it," she exeasy now that all danger was over, that I began to laugh at my nervous fears. How stupid it would have been to have Martha flew up stairs to do her mis-Martha flew up stairs to do her mistress's bidding, while I chafed in the hall and submitted to having my coat brushed. In a moment she returned, bringing the purse, and Marian ran into the dining-room. Two or three minutes passed, and Marian was still fumbling about at the sideboard. I entered the room impatiently. Marian looked at me crossly.

You must answer me that question before you leave this room," I added more sternly; for her evasion of my question disquieted me.

She looked me steadily in the face for a minute, then dropping her eyes, and clasping her hands tightly together, she exclaimed

"I see now the drift of your question.

The money was lost at the same time

"Indeed I cannot," Marian replied. "Indeed I cannot," Marian replied.
"It could not be a housebreaker, for the locks were just as I left them; nothing had been touched, apparently."

"You admit that it could not be any one outside the house, so it must be Martha; that is plain logic," I said, with as much evenness of temper as I could command at the moment.

"It isn't Martha," replied my wife, stubbornly. "I'll never believe it."

For my part, I felt sure that it was a Martha. And as it was quite impossithat she could have got rid of it yes a hoped I could easily discover it.
But she denied the charge so emphatically that it was with a very anxious heart I betook myself to the bedside of my patient. The case was a complicated and peculiar one, and my mind soon became so interested in the progress of the various symptoms, that my own became so interested in the progress of the various symptoms, that my own cares became as things of nought. Af-ter paying one or two minor visits, I re-turned home. Martha opened the door, and immediately retired to the kitchen, without a word. Marian was nowhere to be found. I went up stairs in search of her. She was not there, but a little table in the corner covered with writing materials betrayed her rewith writing materials betrayed her re-cent presence. An open letter in a handwriting I knew and detested attracted my attention. Husbands have certain prerogatives. I asserted one at that moment, and read the letter. If you care to do the same, here it is, i not skip it:

"Dear May:—If you don't contrive to send me E10 before this day week, it will be ruination for me. If you send it, you will enable me to retrieve my former position and become a credit to my family. Yours affectionately, Yours affectionately.

"The young rascal, what fresh mess has he been getting into?" I exclaimed, angrily. This same Frank had been the source of untold squabbles between myself and Marian; holding a fairly good position in the city, for an unmarried man, and yet always getting into debt.

Both of us failing to hit upon any thing better, the wine bin was agreed upon, and as I looked over my evening paper, I watched her place the black japanned box in the drawer, lock it, lock the sideboard, and place the key in her own purse.

In the meantime other cares were pressing hard and fast upon me. In spite of a rigid examination I could discover no clue to the lost money. Of course I had been obliged to make it good, and in order to do this, had drained myself of every available farthing. These events happened at a time of year when it was impossible to call in many outstanding debts; so after a while of desperate struggle against our

"I had quite forgotten it," she exclaimed. "Here, Martha, run upstairs and fetch my purse out of my dressing-case; the keys are in my dressing-table". "Never mind how I knew it," I replied. "Where did you obtain it? You must answer me that question be-about at the sideboard. I entered the room impatiently. Marian looked at me crossly.

"This is quite too bad, Harold. What have you done with the box?" I exclaimed "I see now the drift of your question. The money was lost at the same time that I sent some to Frank. Harold, you suspect me—your own wife—of being the thief, and you have sent that money, and then tease me like this?" "What on earth is the woman talking about?" I cried, bewildered. "Say what you mean in plain words, I beg." "The money's not here. It's gone, box and all," Marian replied, with a white face. "Gone!" I cried, "gone! Where's it gone, how's it gone, or who has taken the rawing. Let me come and look." Marian moved aside, and I knelt down to the drawer. No sign of a box was there. As my wife had said, the money was gone.

shout at the sideboard. I entered the room impatiently. Marian looked at me crossly.

"I see now the drift of your question. The money was lost at the same time that I sent some to Frank. Harold, you suspect me—your own wife—of being the thief, and you have sent that man (I saw he was a detective directly) to track me out, and prove this against me. Do you intend to send me to give me the responsibility of that money, and then tease me like this?"

"Marian mored." I see now, the drift of your question. The money was lost at the same time that I sent some to Frank. Harold, you suspect me—your own wife—of being the thief, and you have sent that man (I saw he was a detective directly to track me out, and prove this against me. Do you intend to send me. Do you intend to send me. Do you intend to send me. The money is not here. It's gone, what you mean in plain words, I beg."

"Merian moved as of what is a shame to give me the responsibility of that money." I cried, bewildered. "Say what you mean in plain words, I beg."

"Marian, I saw he was a detective directly to track me out, and prove this against me. Do you intend to send me. Do you intend to send me. Do you intend to send me. Do you on the thief, and you have sent that m

"The society of a thief cannot be congenial.
For that reason I have kept out of your way sill I have been the trouble you any more. Baby and I have gone to my father. I know you can claim baby if you like to do so, but I think you will see that it is better replied.
ker, for my society of a thief cannot be congenial.
The society of a thief cannot be congenial.

For that reason I have kept out of your way sill I have gone to do so, but I think you will see that it is better for him to be with me. Do not ask me to come back; I never can. The miserable life I have been been for which it is better that the society of a thief cannot be congenial.

For that reason I have kept out of your way sill I have gone to do so, but the society of a thief cannot be congenial.

"That was all, except a few words at the end that had been hastily scratched out, of which I could distinguish only,
