DIME NOVELS.

A few days ago, in an endeavor, to succertain it possible, something of the extent of interest manifested by young, boys is dime novels, a member of the street traversed, were more than a dosen shops in which the class of literature was exposed for social. With one exception every window in which the novels were displayed, had its group left young lads, reading with some intentness the titles of the books and commenting among themselves as to the probable nature of the dimen showles. The while was a revolation, for all though considerable had been heard as to the probable nature of the dimen showles, all the printed statements in existence could not have brought frome as though they reason of their own statistics. This is hardly what might have been expected from the object for which the deeply interested in discussions of the every who found where the could not have brought thome as clerks in stores were observed alt thing the country of the streets of citizens. This is hardly what might have been expected from the object for which the deeply interested in discussions of the dimen stores. The while it will have for personal example the members of the treatment by reason of the treatment in existence could not have brought thome as though they expended in discussions of the deeply interested in discussions of the dimen stores. But the other whom the object for which the deeply interested in discussions of the dimen stores. The continuous proposal free and the support of the stores and the country of the stores and the coun stories. This condition would scarcely be noticed by one who did not look for the six hundred civil servants of St. it, but any person seeking the true John, but to the thousands of other state of affairs will certainly find much citizens who are supporting the moveto surprise him in certain sections of ment for reduction of taxes on incomes, which the delegation advocatthe police department who has had able to do with juvenile crime, the officer stated that in his opinion dime novels and cigarettes created by for the majority of youthful criminals, and that the novels were much worse in this respect than the cigarettes. He referred to he Pluck and Luck Library, the Nick Carter stories, the Magnet series, the Young American, and several others, all of which are no doubt known to the boys, and observed that it would be a great blessing if the importation of such trash could be absolutely prohibited. TEACHING THE YOUNG IDEA.

It is to be hoped that Lord Strathsona, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and member of Canada's parliament, will not be too deeply grieved over the announcement that the Superintendent of Edu-cation in St. John does not agree with the plan recently proposed, whereby elementary drill may be laught in the schools. Possibly the tion raised here that the teaching of young men to shoot their fellow beings is not in line with the principles of Christianity may fail to carry that weight which is apparently attached to it by the head of our local educational system. Yet it is pleasing to note that in Dr. Bridges we have a man who does not shrink from expression his ideas. If he ing of young men to shoot their felfrom expressing his ideas. If he doesn't like a thing he says so, and Bridges is not one who takes up with all the fads and fancies of modern times; he is more conservative in his tendencies and is inclined to devote careful consideration to everything affecting his profession which may be sed. In accordance with this attime mildly expressed his disapproval of certain features which, strangely enough, have found favor elsewhere.

Possibly this is because men and women of the world today are whimsical. It will be remembered that Dr. Bridges did not receive with extreme siasm the suggestion that manual training should be introduced into our school system It took a considerable time for him to realize the advantages of technical education. He could scarcely be regarded as an energetic exponent of the benefits of estic science. The kindergarten system which has been adopted in many cities, even including some which may possibly rank as high as St. John, did not appeal and still does not appeal to Dr. Bridges. He believes rather, in training the mind, in givmakes it an active agency for the acduirement of knowledge in later years. But as regards a present understanding of anything useful Dr. Bridges has his doubts. What a glorious thing it was for Gladstone to stand up in parliament and spout Greek verse while the British column was being slaughtered at Majuba Hill! How magnificent it would have been for Wolfe to recite poetry if he had declined to capture Quebec, on the ground that such conduct would not be in accordance with the principles of Christi-anity! Certainly Dr. Bridges is right. If Canada is attacked at any time how truly good we shall feel in seeing our young men waving Latin rammars over their heads and expounding trigonometry, while they

A LOVE IN SNOW. Upon a quiet bourn
I took of virgin snow,
Nor wind nor rain had worn,

And made an image—so.
And thus I wrought because
Best beauty here below
Is doomed by her own laws
To be the first to go.

Her making was from far Of crystals manifold: Each one had been a star From the gray cope outrolled. Falling through regions hushed; With touch devout and cold So many stars I crushed, To make her perfect mould!

She stood a day, a day,
In beauty strange and lone.
Low at my feet she lay
Ere thrice the moon had shone.
No Galatea spake,
Saving, "I am thy own,"
Yet had she ways to make
Her living love be known!

For since her loveliness
Descendeth realms unseen
She groweth more (not less)
A thing divine, I ween;
Beneath the earth she fied
And there dissolved hath been,
That flowers may life the head,
It spear the grassblade green.

That comfort as they so And she fulfils the dreams That men have as they sow.
The spring is from her hand—
I but begin to know,
With all the mute, glad land,
What love there is in snow!
