Fairville Fire Caused Excitement

Burning of Ernest Scott's Barn Last Evening Caused Many False Reports.

The reflection of flames in the western sky caused quite a little excitement around the city last evening, and it was reported at one time that the Wilson Box Factory was on fire. This, however, was not the case, the blaze being in a barn owned by Ernest Scott, and situated in the rear of his residence, Haynes avenue. This building was totally destroyed, but the firemen were able to keep the fire from spreading to any of the nearby houses.

The alarm was rung in about 8:30 and the fire department quickly responded. It was seen, however, on arrival that the flames had such a hold on the building that it was impossible to save it, and they turned all their energies to the task of keeping it from spreading, in which task they were successful.

It is said there was some hay, poultry and household goods stored in the barn. The hens were rescued, but the hay and furniture were destroyed.

Interesting And Forceful Address

Rev. H. E. Thomas Subject: "The Prohibition Situation and the Duty of the Government."

The large congregation, which attended the service at the Edmund Street Methodist church, last evening, listened with marked attention and evident interest to a forceful address, delivered by the pastor, Rev. H. E. Thomas, who took as his subject, "The Prohibition Situation and the Duty of the Government." The speaker dealt with the subject in a clear and logical manner, dwelling for the most part on the great gains which had been made under the present system of prohibition, and the possible introduction of legislation to amend the act; and the duty of the Government in connection with the situation.

The pastor said that the question of prohibition legislation had been forced to the front lately by many things, and that there was a general campaign on foot to dislodge all temperance legislation. Locally there were certain rumors to the effect that certain proposed amendments to the act were to be made, and there was danger that temperance people might join in a propaganda of criticism and fail to appreciate the great gains, which had been made under the present system.

The speaker enlarged on some of these gains, citing several illustrations by way of argument. Among other things, he said that the bar had been abolished, and although even under the Scott Act open bars were to be found, there was a generation in existence that did not know what an open bar meant. Another stride towards improvement lay in the fact that, at the present time, that element of rowdiness and dissipation, which had formerly existed under the old order of things, had been practically eliminated.

He also stated that the general well-being of the people had increased. There was no doubt that the money which was formerly spent at the bars was now being utilized to better purposes. Results in this direction were very generally felt, as was evidenced by a statement of the United States comptroller of currency to the effect that, during the year ending June 30, 1921—a period of considerable unemployment—savings banks' deposits had increased by over $25,000,000, and the number of depositors by 174,000.

Another gain lay in the fact that there had been a decided decrease in drunkenness, which was the main purpose of all temperance legislation, and from almost every source, evidence was cumulative and convincing that prohibition decreased the arrests for this offence. Illustrative of this point, the speaker cited the fact that, in the cities in the U. S. with over 20,000 population, the arrests for drunkenness decreased from 316,943 in 1917 to 109,768 in 1920.

Regarding the condition in this province, the pastor said that it seemed that a deliberate attempt was being made to destroy the authority of the chief liquor inspector. The true appeal in this connection was to the police records, and these favor the effectiveness of the administration of the present chief inspector. The number of arrests in St. John in 1921 was the lowest in a great many years, excluding the year 1918, when the importation of rum was brought into arrest. Arrests for drunkenness in 1921 numbered 697, and in 1920, they numbered 953; while the arrests for all causes in 1921 were 1,064, and in 1920, they were 1,404. It was a fact of all these facts, the speaker said, that we could hardly say that the enforcement of the prohibition law had been a failure. Despite this array of facts, the fact remained that the police showed almost every morning showed a list of drunks, and this would lead one to believe that there were very serious loopholes which were being remedied. The duty of the Government therefore was clear.

The speaker stated that there was a serious effort being made to destroy the authority of the British Columbia act were to be adopted in this province. He discounted this report for various reasons. He went on to say that the need of money had been advanced as the reason for the proposed legislation. In this connection, he advanced the argument that a depleted treasury was not a sufficient reason to cause the temperance law to be made a scapegoat. Because Quebec and British Columbia thrive on revenue derived from laws governing the sale of liquor, we no good reason why New Brunswick should be placed in the same position. Not once, but twice, had the people of this province shown as the polls that they wanted prohibition, and a principle of good government is to give the people what they want.

In regard to vendors, the preacher thought that the government should pay greater attention to the betterment of vendors' licenses. He felt that according to the present conditions, the vendor was as great a menace as the boot-legger. The speaker advocated fixing a salary for the vendor, thus making the amount of liquor sold no consideration. He also thought that, instead of 25 or 30 vendors in St. John, there should be but two or three, and that number would be sufficient to supply the demand.

He also thought that the penalty for breaches of the conditions in the act was too light, and suggested that the penalty for the first offence should be a fine of $500 or six months imprisonment, and for the next offence, a sentence of one year with no option.

He paid a tribute to the medical profession, and explored the fact that so many medical men were practicing the profession by issuing so many prescriptions indiscriminately.

The speaker concluded his address by stating that any law that brought such gracious results as the prohibition act was worthy of any province, and he felt that the Government would do the proper thing, which was not rather to amend them with a view to lessening their rigor.
