rember—gloomy, dark and drear, ald of the dying year; ight but wailing winds I hear brough the Forest dreary, in the cold and loy North reely looks the winter forth, in eagle looks on earth rom his savage syrie.

om the clouds of heaven grey, at the mindrope find their way, thing through the livelong day, Briaging thoughts of sadness, ded are the flowers and dead, eping in their lowly bed, two dream when winter's fied, they will wake to gladness.

Wildly on the bleak seashore
Fierce the ringing billows rear,
Strive to rush their barrier o'en;
The proud mighty ocean,!
Like despairing souls in pain,
Shricks the winds in mounded strain,
But their wash is all in usin,
Vain their, wild commution.

There is one who hath the power O'er the skies that darkly lower— Power to change the darkest hour To bright moss resplendant; At his voice the billows draid Calm their wrath, for He hath said: Nore shall thy proud waves be stayed, On my power dependent."

Dream we now of summer days.
Neath an orient golden haze,
Tracing out Life's pleasant ways,
With no thought of somow.
Ah! these perfect days are gone,
Like the summer binds have flown;
For the past we should not mourn—
Life is all to-morrow.

Bleak November soon is past, Autumn storms must end at last, Child December hastens, fast, Piles the mow around us; But in wintry storms or sleet, Or the golden summer sweet, Still Our Father's hand we greet, Still His love bath found us.

A Hobrible Trade.—Opium is stealing away the physical and moral life of China, and the horrible sin of forcing the trade upon the Chinase Government, even at the cannon's mouth, lies at the door of the great English nation—achristian nation whose missionaries are laboring in every open port in China to bring the heathen people to a knowledge of Christ's truth. According to the last quarterly report, the revenue from opium alone nearly equals that derived from all other imported articles; and this enormous amount of poison is nearly all produced and brought into the empire by British subjects and British ships. All careful observers can see that heathen China is being slowly but surely dragged down to observers can see that heathen Uhina is being slowly but surely dragged down to the depths of utter wretchedness by this rapidly increasing evil, and all the world knows that to a very large extent, the responsibility rests with f Christian England: No traveller in China cen fail be profoundly stirred by this subject, to realize the solenu duty of all ristian nations to strengthen the feeble ands of the Government against this

A Tichborne Witness.—One of the witnesses in the Tichborne case, and old lady named Eliza Fround, created a great deal of amusement. She knew Roger vary well in 1848. "One day I want to bathe my cats. My dear-mother had left them me, and I idolfred them: [Laughter.] Mr. Roger came up and wanted to bathe them for me. I prevented him from doing so, for I thought he would bathe them to perfection if they coretched his bands. [Laughter] The mext morning I thought I could bathe them without interruption, so I went to the water three quarters of an hour carlier; but athere was his lordship waiting. [Laughter.] I knew he wanted to saids my case.

Can you describe him to me? Yes, sir. He was very thin; but the cycle of mine very much "for whee brocked he winked; then he littled train, and again he winked. [Laughter.]

Strict economy is, doubtless, a heautiful thing; but we fancy that even Poor Richard never heard of so picturesque an instance of this virtue as the two which come from Iowa and Virginia .--The lows tale is that of a farmer whose infant daughter was lately attacked by a stake. A quick witted woman seized a spade and killed the animal, in the effort breaking the weapon. What did that high-minded farmer do? He made the woman under threat of a lawsuit, pay the full value of the spade—65 cents.—

Tis a height of virtoe to which a few men could attain. The Virginian-story is that of a happy bridegroom, who, ou departing from the parsonage where the fatal ceremony had been performed, handed the parson a fat yellow envelope. It contained a large piece of brown paper—and nothing more.
