

laughed quite loud, and when she told Ernie, he said Bunny was the wildest rabbit in the world.

For some days Bunny went on waking his mistress in this way. But after a little while she was woken one morning by something still more wonderful. She felt something pat her cheek quite softly, and when it woke her, there was Bunny sitting on the pillow and it was he who had patted her cheek to wake her.

After this wherever Ernie and Lisa were, Bunny might be seen with them. He sat in the arbour, he frisked about on the grass, he nibbled leaves under the bushes in the shrubbery, but he never thought of running away.

At last he grew into a big rabbit, and at breakfast one day the children's father said, Bunny is too old now to live in the house. You and Lisa, Ernie, may go and see the carpenter this morning and ask him to make a nice hutch for him.

When the hutch was finished it was put up close to the door which led to the children's gardens and where they could easily take cabbage and lettuce leaves to him. Bun was a very happy rabbit, for his little master and mistress took good care of him, and as he had never had liberty to run about the woods he found the shrubbery quite big enough for him, and thought his hutch a very comfortable little house to sleep in at night.

Every one who heard Bunny's story liked to go and see him and he had a great many visitors and they all admired him. But he loved Ernie and Lisa the best of anybody, though, I am afraid, he could not quite understand the long story they often told him of their walk to the mill and of Lisa's fall and how they thought it the most fortunate misfortune that had ever happened.

But if Bun had understood it all, I dare say he would have thought so too.

THE END.

A man of your word.

Learn to be a man of your word. One of the most disheartening of all things is to be associated in an undertaking with a person whose promise is not to be depended upon—and there are plenty of them in this wide world, people whose promise is as slender a tie as a spider's web. Let your given word be a hempen cord, a chain of wrought steel, that will bear the heavy-est sort of strain. It will go far to making a man out of you. And a real man is the noblest work of God—not a lump of moist putty, moulded and shaped by the last influence met with that was calculated to make an impression; but a man, a forceful, energized self-reliant and reliable character, a positive quantity that can be calculated upon.

"Susy's Six Teachers."

"Susy, you were a very good girl at church this morning."

"How could I be naughty mamma?"

"O! in a great many ways. One child could disturb fifty people."

"What could it do?"

"It could keep getting up and down on its seat. It could keep asking if service was almost done. It could turn over the leaves of a hymn book and rattle them. It could gape, and yawn, and fidget. Or it might turn right into other peoples' faces in a rude way."

Susy had seen children do all these things. Mr. Ought whispered that she had done some of them herself.

"Mamma," said she, "it is hard to sit still."

"I know it is, and that is one reason why it is good to go to church.—You know you must sit still, and try to learn to do it. And it is well to learn to do hard things."

"What for do little children go to church?" asked Susy. "They don't know what the minister says."

"No I know they don't understand much. But there are a good many reasons why they should go to church, even then. I cannot explain them all to such a little girl as you are. But one reason is this: If they always go when they are children, they will be likely to go when they are grown up. Besides nobody goes just to hear what the minister says. We go to worship God. Even little Susy can please and honor him by just sitting still in the house, and making no noise. And some of the blessings he has for the grown people he showers down on the little ones who are brought there to get it." Susy smiled.

"I'll sit still, and maybe he'll shower some on me," said she.

"You needn't say maybe," said Faith. "You may say he certainly will."

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary, the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows.
