Lady Marjorie's Love

"No, no, I won't have you say that!" Marjorie dissented instantly. There's lots that I don't understand and that I want you to tell me presently, but I know that if you did run away to Loftus it was only because you loved him. Well, what's that? I ran away to him, and I do not love him at all. That's forty times worse—it must be!"

For all her gay words and merry manner, her own eyes were sympathetically moist. Norah kissed her. "You are a dear little creature, Marjorie. Just what I told Gerard you were. And I feel that I have no right to the affectionate reception that you have given me, dear."

"Why not?" Marjorie opened her brown eyes again. "Oh," she said, sinking down upon her cushion again "because of Loftus, you mean? As though that mattered! If he was in love with somebody else so was I. So I was as bad as he was. He never cared for me the least in the world—I used to suppose he did, but that was because I was too blind and too stupid to understand—and I'm sure I never cared for him—ask Gerard if he thinks I did—and so what harm could you possibly have done me? You couldn't dear, and you didn't—I won't have you think so."

She laughed suddenly. "Oh, Norah, I could see the other night what I never suspected before—that there were two Loftus Blighs, and that used to get the one and that you got the other. Well, with all my heart you may keep him dear."

Norah, with a brightening face returned the impulsive embrace with which the girl's arms were thrown round her neck. In a moment Marjorie sank down on her cushion once again, crossing her arms on her knee.

"North?"
"Well, my dear?"
"We are sisters now, aren't we?"
"If you can like me well enough, Marjorie."

"Like you. I more than like you. When I only say I like a person you may know it means that I don't care twopenny about her. You are dear old Mr. Chubburn's daughter and my cousin Loftus's wife; you are Gerard's sister—which of course makes you my sister too—and I am going to be awfully fond of you. She looked up with a glance of laughing interrogatory. "Sisters always tell each other everything don't they," she said, settling her arms comfortably. "and so must we. Well, your sister has told you all about her love story—even the abominable way she used to snub her dear boy—so tell her if you please all about yours."

Norah smiled, amused. Certainly if her beauty had captivated Marjorie, Marjorie's charm had captivated Norah.

"What shall I tell you my dear?"
"Why everything—everything, that is, that I don't understand. I can't make it all out and I am sure Gerard can't or I should have made him tell me. I know that you were down in that place in the country for your health, and that Loftus was there too and saw you and fell in love with you, which I don't wonder at the least in the world." She glanced up at the beautiful face admiringly. Loftus was engaged to me and that made it awkward for him. But North, dear, I can't in the least see why you should have run away or why you should have kept your marriage a secret like that. It isn't as if you were poor and nobody or as if he could be anything but proud of you with all his heart!" she concluded with a flattery as pretty as sinned.

"Thank you my dear!" Norah kissed her again. "Well, I will try to explain Marjorie, though I must make myself seem a very foolish woman I fear. Looking back I think myself so, though believe me if it were to come all over again I should probably do the same."

"Of course you would!" Marjorie responded comfortably and comfortingly. "Don't mind telling me North. I won't say a word about Loftus that I wouldn't really! How was it that you ran away? Had he asked you to marry him?"

"No dear!" North hesitated, coloring. "Will you understand Marjorie if I say that he had all but done that and that I had all but answered him?"
"Yes, and then?"
"And then because of his engagement to you—which I know he had remembered, and been ashamed to remember all the time—he went away without bidding me good-bye."

"Oh," cried Marjorie in incredulous indignation, "he could treat you like that?"
"He wrote me a letter my dear. I received it two days after I reached home, when I was almost distracted with my doubts and misery. It told me nothing of his engagement but it spoke of his poverty and other obstacles and bade me farewell for all ways. But it left me," said North with a quiver in her rich voice, "surprised that I had ever been of his love."

"And so you ran away to him?"
questioned Marjorie softly.
(To be Continued.)

A GOOD MEDICINE FOR THE SPRING

Do Not Use Harsh Purgatives—A Tonic is All You Need.

Not exactly sick—but not feeling quite well. That is the way most people feel in the spring. Easily tired, appetite feeble, sometimes headaches, and a feeling of depression. Pimples or eruptions may appear on the skin, or there may be twinges of rheumatism or neuralgia. Any of these indicate that the blood is out of order—that the indoor life of winter has left its mark upon you and may easily develop into more serious trouble.

Do not dose yourself with purgatives, so many people do, in the hope that you can put your blood right. Purgatives gallop through the system and weaken instead of giving strength. Any doctor will tell you this is true. What you need in spring is a tonic that will make new blood, and build up the nerves. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine that can do this speedily, safely and surely. Every dose of this medicine makes new blood which clears the skin, strengthens the appetite and makes tired, depressed women and children bright, active and strong. Mrs. Maude Bagg, Lemberg, Sask., says: "I can understand why I'm so tired to-night." I heard a woman say the other day. "I haven't done any heavy work or anything that ought to tire me."

"What have you been doing?" I asked.
"Goodness," she said, "don't ask me. It would take half the evening to tell you. I put the house in order, and then I went downtown to have my suit fitted. While I was there I did half a dozen little errands and put in an hour at the dentist's. This afternoon I wrote a big batch of notes in regard to some statistics I am getting for our woman's club, spent an hour or so at the telephone making arrangements for our college sorority banquet, finished that waist I was making—and what else did I do? Oh, yes, I know, washed out some silk stockings and chamois gloves, and did up two of my fussy collars."

"Then you were pretty busy most of the day?" I asked.
"Busy! I should say so," she retorted, "I didn't stop a minute."
And yet she wondered why she was tired.
"I didn't stop a minute"—how often that could be said of the average woman's day.

How many women fill every hour of their waking time crammed jammed full of such activities, rushing breathlessly from one to another; often nervous and hurried because they are afraid of not being able to get everything in, or of having some unexpected call made upon them, or of not being on time for some appointment! How many women fill their days with sixteen or seventeen such hours, and their weeks with seven such days, and then wonder why they are tired and nervous, why they are easily fretted, why they don't enjoy life as much as they did when they were younger!

No day should be planned so full of activities that there will be no passive time left. Every day should have some moments unplanned, some time kept for the unexpected call or for just relaxing.

Only so can one be fit to really enjoy the great privilege of being busy. Labor is the salt of life. Do not spoil your capacity to enjoy it. For "If the salt have lost its savour, wherewithal shall it be salted?"

hesitatingly recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a blood builder and tonic. I was very much run down when I began using the Pills, and a few boxes fully restored my health."
Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MUSIC and DRAMA

GRAND OPERA HOUSE
The Franklin Stock Company which opens their summer season at the Grand, has selected for their opening play "The Man on the Box." This play was made famous by Henry E. Dixey and played here at $1.50 and $2.00 prices. So no that patrons can witness this production at popular prices, it will no doubt test the capacity of the theatre. Mgr. Weaver has purchased the entire special scenic equipment for this play and promises a stronger supporting company than he had here last season, during their summer run.
