One night his father, in a fit of drunxen rage, had thrown a heavy earthen spittoon at a tavern keeper who ordered him out of his place for making a noise. He had been aircsted, committed to jail, and expected to be hanged, but the man did not die, so the prisoner was only sent to the penitentiary. His wife and infait child were taken to the district poor house. There the child showed of what material he was by leatning to swear as he learned to talk, and to steal about as soon as he could walk.
