Glider Prize.

EXPERTS' HOPES.

Every branch of flying—research, invention, commercial, sport, war, and peace will be advanced by the great motor-glider contest next September, when a Daily Mail prize of £1,000, open to the world, will be awarded to the competitor who flies the longest distance over 50 miles with a small handy popular low-powered aeroplane over a triangular course.

A contest will be held at the same place and time and under the same rules for a prize of £500 offered by the Duke of Sutherland for purely British competitors flying British machines. It will be possible for one competitor to win both prizes with one flight.

Brig-General R. K. Bagnall Wild, speaking as technical representative for the Duke of Sutherland, Under-Secretary of State for Air, on the Royal Aero Club Gliding Committee says:

The Duke of Sutherland, like The Daily Mail, is most anxious to promote the invention, manufacture, and use of the small motor glider. His prize is offered for a British machine flown by a British pilot in the hope that the contest will produce a machine which will enable the public to fly for themselves with safety and at a reasonable cost.
