Just a word about prices. The exceptional quality of our glasses and the accurate examination of the eye may lead to the conclusion that our prices must be high. But we manufacture glasses complete, thus saving the manufacturers' and jobbers' profits. Our $2.50 glasses are just the same as are sold elsewhere for $5. When others advertise $5 glasses for $2.50 they are simply meeting our regular price. Our Optician's examination is free.

THIRTY-FIVE YEARS AGO TODAY
(From The London Advertiser of April 28, 1871.)
Rev. Mr. Milligan, of Detroit, will preach in the North Street Presbyterian Church (Rev. John Scott's), on Sunday morning and evening.

No doubt the Mendelssohn Quartet Club will meet with an encouraging reception in the city. They are musicians of acknowledged talent, and their concert have everywhere attracted crowded audiences of the best classes of society.

The proposed jubilee of the Germans of Berlin, Waterloo, London, Hamilton, Toronto and other parts of Western Ontario, announced for next Tuesday at Berlin, County of Waterloo, will, it is anticipated, far exceed any German demonstration before attempted in this country. In reference thereto the Berlin telegraph says: "It is true that coming events cast their shadows before, then we may safely predict that the forthcoming jubilee of the inhabitants of Waterloo, in commemoration of the ratification of peace between France and Germany, will surpass in magnitude any previous demonstration ever held in this locality. Preparations are going on vigorously on all sides, and the enthusiasm evinced in the matter by our German fellow-townsmen is unbounded. The principal streets of the town and along the route of the procession will be handsomely decorated with evergreen arches, festoons, flags, etc., while nearly all the public buildings, hotels, stores and prominent dwellings will be profusely clad in similar tokens of heartfelt rejoicings of our people over the restoration of peace to their beloved Fatherland."

MACHINE-MADE GHOSTS
Eldred, the Medium, Retires from the Business.

London, April 25.—Charles Eldred, the "ghost-maker," has retired from business.

He said to a reporter, who found him in his magnificent house at West Bridgeford, near Nottingham, England: "I fully realize, now that this has happened, the great dangers of spiritualism, and I shall profit by my experience."

"I have withdrawn absolutely from public work, and I feel that whatever may be obtained at any time through my instrumentality will be given only to those who are able to analyze and find in the way such manifestations should be treated."

The wizard of Bridgeford is compelled to admit the exposure of ghost-making machinery, but he endeavors to explain its presence in the secret drawer of his trick chair at Mr. Bralley's house with an effrontery which is really refreshing.

"To say I have been the unconscious instrument in the production of things found that evening when the exposure was made is perhaps asking the public to believe too much," he said ingenuously, "but anyone with the slightest knowledge of hypnotism will realize at once how easy this is, and how suggestion plays a great part in one's everyday life."

But the manufacturer of ghosts has a grievance against the spiritualists. "Those who should know and realize will be the style with the ladies this summer.

KING EDWARD AND THE EARTHQUAKE

How His Majesty Refused to Be Disturbed by Shock on the Riviera.

London, April 28.—King Edward's experience of earthquakes, although of a restricted character, is sufficiently entertaining to be placed on record. It may be remembered that about fifteen years ago there was quite a severe earthquake along the French and Italian Riviera, which bowled over a number of badly constructed buildings, knocked others out of plumb and created a good deal of alarm. It came during the night time, very suddenly. Every room in the hotel where King Edward, then Prince of Wales, was staying, groaned with its walls, creaked with its floors and rattled with its furniture. All the dogs in it howled together, and the noisy mace in the manager's office screamed at the top of its voice. Then came a lull, as sudden as the disturbance, and the smothered sound of many a slipped foot and rustling dressing gown were heard hurrying along the corridors and down the marble stairs. And the prince at the first suggestion of danger his faithful equerry, General Sir Stanley Clarke, bounded out of bed, and making his way across the sleeping saloon knocked at the door of the prince's bedroom.

"What's the matter?" asked a drowsy voice.

"There's an earthquake! Come sir!" was the shouted reply.

"Then why don't you send it away?" was the royal answer.

"Won't you come outside, sir?" "Outside? No, certainly not! I'm in bed. Go away!"

The equerry, his duty performed, followed the hurrying crown out into the open air, under the deep blue sky and tranquil stars. After an hour of this peaceful scene, alarm died away and everyone had returned to the hotel to dress, when the second shock came, driving them all out again into the garden.

The seer's thoughts again at once flew to the sleeping prince. The heir apparent to the throne of Great Britain was, in a measure, in his special charge. How had he acquitted himself of his sacred stewardship. A himself of his sacred stewardship. A himself of his sacred stewardship. A himself of his sacred stewardship.

Had the prince perished? In an instant he had flung the door open and dashed across the ante-room. The curtains at the door of the bed-chamber were drawn close together. With a frozen hand he seized them and drew them apart. As he did so something—but whether an aerolite, a thunderbolt or a falling beam he knew not—struck him full in the face. His head swam, and in a momentary faintness he leaned against the door. But the next moment a voice fell on his ear, grave and reproachful:

"Look here, Clarke, I won't have any more of this, and if you don't shut up making that beastly row, and let me go to sleep, I'll eny the other boot at you."

Among the curious things that arrest attention on arriving in Moscow is the absence of whips among drivers of cabs, carriages, and all sorts of vehicles. There is a law prohibiting their use. There is not a single whip in use in Moscow. The excellent condition of the horses attests the benefit of this humane law.
