A Faithful Comrade.

Two or three years ago a handsom Two or three years ago a handsome church that was being built in one of the smaller Belgian towns was fast approaching completion. One thing, however, was still lacking – the gilded rabower, a gentleman who conducts in the same of the enable the workmen to fix this weathercock. At this juncture two of the men came forward, and offered to get over of winter dairies in the South of Irethe difficulty by the one of them standing on the broad shoulders of his companion. Brave fellows they must both have been to undertake such a perils ous office, but their strong faith in God. and in each other nerved them to the work. The broad shouldered man planted his feet firmly on the last narplanted his feet firmly on the last narrow plank raised high in air, and grasping a prejecting pole to steady himself, he bent forward whilst his slighter-built comrade sprang nimbly upon his shoulders; and this done, handed him the colossal cock, the brazen full of molten lead, and the necessary tools. Meanwhile a large crowd had gathered in the market-place below, and had flocked to every window whence they could catch a glimpse of the proceeding. Lost in amazementat the bravery of the two men, they gazed in silent, the two men, they gazed in silent, breathless suspense, inwardly praying that the good Lord would protect His servants who had put their trust in

The operation of fixing and soldering the weathercook only occupied a few minutes, but each minute seemed to be long hours to the spectators. At last the dangerous job was completed, and with a sigh of relief the assembled multitude breathed freely once more, and exclaimed aloud, 'Thank God!'

To turn to Mr. Bolster's case, the silo was a house 14 feet long by 8 feet wide, and 9 feet in height. On the list of July last he commenced to fill this chamber with grass cut from his lawn. The grass is stated to be long and rank, the lawn being rich and overshadowed by trees. On the date mentioned Mr. Bolster got the grass out into two inch lengths, and FILIMINGSE. and oversandowed by trees. If the second shouldered man tarried so long on his lofty perch, and why when he at hat began to descend, his usually elastic step was slow and and tottering. Fearing something was amiss, they hastened to the foot of the scaffolding, just in time to see him sink powerless to the ground. The sac cause of his weakness was soon apparent, for his shoulders, arms, and breast were found to be covered with burns. Little had the gazing crowd guessed of the awful agony that noble soul had have fully allowed the moliten lead to drop down continually upon him. Yet he stood all the while as steadfast and immovable as a rock, never betraying the torture he was in by the slightest outward sign, or even allowing a groan to escape hilps, remembering that the life of his comrade had been confided in his chart. The wounded here was conveyed to thospital, where, after a long period of severe suffering, he at length recovered. The tale of the martyr-like fortitude displayed by this workman on behalf of his fellow soon spread, nouly over the whole of Belgium, but was carried beyond its borders, and from far and near tributes of admiss the man who had a stand to the salo is defective, and if it is not sufficient somes to weigh a day of four feet high.
