

DR. J. C. THOM, STREETSVILLE, ONT.—Extracted honey at ten cents, comb at eighteen. At these prices I would prefer to raise extracted if sales were equally easy to make.

O. O. POPPLETON, HAWKS PARK, FLA.—I think raising extracted honey to be the most profitable but have never raised enough comb honey to be a judge of the comparative cost of raising each kind.

H. COUSE, THE GRANGE, ONT.—That depends on market, seasons, appliances etc. I raise mostly extracted, but like to have some comb honey too, the former pays me best as I am yet gaining experience in raising comb honey.

M. EMIGH, HOLBROOK, ONT.—The present outlook in the British market would favor extracted honey. But I am accustomed to taking comb honey and am going to stay there a little longer. Comb should sell at fifteen cents when extracted sells at ten cents.

H. D. CUTTING, CLINTON, MICH.—It all depends on what you will do with it after it is raised. In my individual case "extracted" because I sell it for the same as comb, but I prefer to raise comb honey. I don't like to fuss and muss with extracted. I have a good home market and that is something all should have.

DR. C. C. MILLER, MARENGO, ILL.—That depends. If you had an accurate answer from twenty persons who had made conclusive tests, no two might be alike and not one of them could tell for certain what would be the truth in your case. I think I can make more money by raising comb, whilst I am confident extracting is more profitable for others. Your market, your pasture, your management, make all the difference in the world.

BY THE EDITOR.—(1) Depends on your market, system of management, and the kind of hive you use. (2) The comb should sell for one-third more than the extracted.
