

There is a perpetual debate in this country about whether or not our foreign policy is different enough from that of the United States. For some people, being different is more important than being right. I think the real phenomenon in recent years is that Washington's approach to foreign policy is becoming more Canadian. I think that has happened with regard to the CSCE, to NATO, to Latin America, to the United Nations and that is a welcome development appropriate to this new era of pragmatism and co-operation.
