

battle of Queenston 13th October, 1812, aged 27 years. He was Lieutenant-Colonel Canadian militia and Military Secretary to Major-General Sir Isaac Brock and fought at Detroit (medal)." He was the last of three bright spirits connected with the profession in the young Province who met violent deaths each in a different form, the other being Attorney-General White in a duel, and Solicitor-General Gray in the waves of Lake Ontario.

The Law School at the east end of the Hall has a large meeting room, several class rooms and a small library.

In the students' reading room is a brass tablet erected by the Society "in memory of Thomas Brown Phillips Stewart, Barrister-at-Law who, by his last will, devoted his property to the advancement of Students-at-Law, born at Keenanville, August 7, 1858, died at Toronto, February 2, 1892." Mr. Phillips Stewart was a young man of culture and education. He published a volume of poems in 1887. The income from his legacy of about $7,500 is applied to increase the law students' library.

There is also an oil portrait of the late William Albert Reeve, M.A., Q.C., first principal of the Law School, 1889-1894. Framed together in the librarians' office off the main library are two fine miniatures representing Governor Simcoe and Chief Justice Osgoode, given to the Society by their learned admirer, as appears by the legend beneath them:—"Legavit Henricus Scadding, D.D., A.D. 1901."

The valuable libraries at the Hall had their origin early in the last century partly by gift from gentlemen interested in the profession.

In a book styled "Registry of Donations to the Society" a record is preserved of such gifts. The Hon. Thomas Scott, formerly Chief Justice, gave eight volumes of manuscript precedents in pleadings; Dr. W. W. Baldwin is credited with 41 volumes, embracing history, poetry, biography and law. Mr.
