BRITISH FIRED MINE

IN ENEMY'S LINES

Successful Operation in German Trenches Won Village for Allies.

CASUALTIES MANY

Particulars of Incident Near Armentieres in Official Report.

LONDON, April 16.—News of an important mining operation by the British near Armentieres, in northern France, by which a hole was blown in the German line, is contained in an official eye-witness narrative dated April 15, and issued by the government press bureau. It follows:

"On the morning of the ninth we fired a mine at Le Touquet (Le Touquet), two miles from Armentieres. The greater part of the village was in our hands, but the enemy's lines on the outskirts ran thru houses connected by loop-holed garden walls. Under this position a gallery was driven, despite the difficulty of underground excavation thru the waterlogged areas close to the river.

"The operation was crowned with complete success. By the explosion debris was hurled 300 feet in the air, some falling 250 yards beyond our trenches. When the smoke cleared away the wall had disappeared, and the debris was taken by an enormous crater, which had been blasted in the middle of the German line. How many Germans were killed it is impossible to say, but their casualties must have been considerable, since the trenches were fully manned. Twenty mine wounded were afterwards carried across the river."

HOLLAND INDIGNANT AT LOSING STEAMER

Feat of German Submarine Leads to Threats of War by Press.

Press Comment Bitter.

The whole press manifests indignation and resentment over the outrage at the Katwijk. The Telegraph even calls it one of assassins, and says that should Holland be involved in war the moment should be chosen by the Government and not by the Germans, that has these coward assassins as accomplices. The Standard says that there is no doubt that a German submarine sank the Katwijk. It proceeds:

"The German Government must be under the firm conviction that what may happen, and whatever they do to long as they respect Dutch neutrality, Holland will maintain her neutrality. It certainly is to be regretted that our sincere wishes to remain out of the war have had this effect upon the German Government. We wish to remain outside of the war, but there is a limit to the countries that end, and neighboring countries should get the impression that Holland was being humiliated and her rights violated without protest, and might be pursued at too high a price. History tells us that our ancestors seldom re-
