WALL STREET VIEWS

Henry Clews says: The monetary situation is satisfactory in some respects; that is bankers have the situation well in hand and are doing their best to prevent dangerous inflation.
The tendency, if any, is toward deflation, and commercial paper rates are slightly easier in some sections of the country. The loan market at this centre is, however, still under artificial regulation; and such restraint often works unjustly, if not detri-

J. S. Bache and Co. say: The market seems to have been deserted by large interests for the time being, and industrial specialties to be the nly stocks with any courage. These have continued to advance in spite of the decline in the steel stocks, which have been accentuated by the report of falling off in tonnage of the United States Steel Corporation. The market, on the whole, has shown unusual ability to resist the depressing influence of lower prices for Steel—usually one of the market leaders.
