ON THE QUEEN'S SLATE.

authorities and another had been put up by the Marquess of Ventry near the Marble Arch. The first triumphal arch was a very handsome castellated structure in imitation of grey stone, covered with ivy, and bore the motto, "My heart is our throne." The second triumphal arch was at the bottom of the Horseware-road and not at the Marble Arch. It was covered with crimson cloth, flowers and flags and bore the motto, "God Bless Our Queen."

Throughout the route was tenanted by an immense assemblage. Every window had its occupants, every roof its watchers, every available space in the streets, the paths and chairs, and even the trees and railings of the parks, were black with royal humanity.

To draw the Queen slowly to gratify her people, her face everywhere loosened the voice of the multitude in unrestrained strength the rich and tumultuous expression of loyalty and affection broke forth. Volumes of cheers rose clearly above the constant roar of acclamation. Hats were thrown in the air, handkerchiefs waved in welcome, everyone vied with his neighbor in active demonstration of loyalty and delight.

Nearing Piccadilly the Queen saw for the first time the conspicuous evidence of what had been prepared for the morning. The main grey walls of the Apsley House were gone in a profusion of decoration, the grand stand at the side and front of it garlanded with flowers, flags and mottoes, stood crowded with some of the Queen's nobles, no less exuberant in their welcome than that from the packed windows and roof of St. George's Hospital and the stand in front of the Queen's commoners.

Through Burton's Gate the Queen passed on to the garden entrance of Buckingham Palace, always between the living lane of her subjects, always the object of endless homage and salutes of cheers, which continued until the gates had shut the Queen from view.

Dressed in black.

The Queen was dressed in black and showed slowly right and left to the loyal greetings of her subjects. The Empress Frederick, who sat beside Her Majesty, was also dressed in black; Princesses Christian and Patricia, sat beside the Queen and the Empress.

Admiral J. N. Miller, U. S. N., and the other members of the United States special embassy reached the palace a few minutes after 2 o'clock.

The Republican simplicity of attire of the American officers was in startling contrast with the brilliancy of the uniforms around them. The American party was received by the Master of Ceremonies and was conducted by Ceremonies.

In addition to the United States special embassy, the envoys present represented most of the royal houses of Europe, as well as many foreign countries. Those of the envoys who did not wander about the palace, chatted in the smoking room.

They Went Singing.

Ten minutes before 4 o'clock the envoys stood in line and went singly to the audience room, to which they were conducted by Col. the Hon. Sir William James Colville, the Master of Ceremonies.

The bow drawing room, in which the envoys were received, is a large room, heavily ornamented with gilt and hung with silk. It is 54 feet long, finely proportioned and richly decorated. At the end opposite the entrance is an alcove, formed by two wall pillars surmounted by a carved and gilt wreath, borne by two winged figures, to which were attached medallions, bearing royal insignia. The walls are hung with crimson satin, those of the alcove with crimson velvet. The ceiling is of a rich gold hue. The ceiling is richly carved and gilt in the boldest Italian style of the 15th century, embellished with arabesque designs, and has a white marble frieze, adorned with bas-reliefs, illustrating the life of the House of Windsor.

The data, inscribed in velvet, was depicted with Royal Anxieties, the living lane of her subjects, always the object of endless homage and salutes of cheers, which continued until the gates had shut the Queen from view.

CHARGED WITH ARSON.

Did James Murray and Frederick McMillan Fire Hugh Cotter's House Near Nelson Village?

Chief Inspector John Murray of the Ontario government service did a big day's work yesterday. He went out to Burlington on the morning train and by night James Murray, 29, and Frederick McMillan, 30, alias "Frank," had been arrested and committed for trial by Magistrate W. H. Young of Brant, on a charge of arson.

It appears that, while the climate was rainy, the two men had been at the house of Hugh Cotter, an old resident of Nelson, east of Burlington, who was mysteriously burned to death on the evening of the Queen's birthday.

Mr. Cotter had been home, with his valuable library, was watched. Just before the fire it appears that the two men had been at the house.

Mr. Cotter saw a light, as it came from one of the windows, and he saw a blaze and two men were leaving. One of them was carrying a bundle of sticks.

Mr. Cotter recognized the two men as being the same who had been at the house of Hugh Cotter, an old resident of Nelson, east of Burlington, who was mysteriously burned to death on the evening of the Queen's birthday.

Other witnesses of the fire were the two men who were at the house of Hugh Cotter, an old resident of Nelson, east of Burlington, who was mysteriously burned to death on the evening of the Queen's birthday.
