One on the Ump.
Out on the Pacific coast they have umpire days when nothing but kind words and presents are supposed to be used to reach the century mark. The umpireable player must have his way, indicated in this story told by Del Hardy.

We were playing at Portland in the game game when affairs were halted so that some flowers could be presented to Jack McCarthy. The boys gathered around as usual to make a ceremony. McArdle buttoned right into the circle and Seven lengths. Coming up the harbor the Neptunes put up a plucky fight and vainly endeavored to overtake their opponents.

The sail boat race was the next event. The entries were boats sailed by T. T. Lantlum, George Hare, Dr. Daniel and S. A. Busta. The course for this race was around Partridge Island and back. It was a pretty race and one that called into requisition all the skill in sailing and knowledge of the wind and tide possessed by those in the boats. Mr. Lantlum proved superior in this respect and finished first, with George Hare second.

George F. Smith officiated as starter, Fred Langman as referee, and George H. Sulder as timer.
A 2 to 0 Game.
On September 21, 1888, the Nationals and Bates College team played one of the best games ever witnessed, up to that time, in St. John. Although the locals were shut out their playing was good and the fans were well satisfied. The score ended 2 to 0, the visitors scoring one run in the first and another in the fifth inning.

"THE GOOSE GIRL"

"THE GOOSE GIRL," from Harold McGrath's world-famous romantic novel of the same name, in which Marguerite Clark appears as the star, is a charming example of pure and unadulterated romance of the screen. It is a place which takes us all far from the routine of everyday existence into the life of imaginary principlins, where the scenes are stolen by gypsies and young kings refuse to marry the mates chosen for "reasons of state." But, tragically, "The Goose Girl" becomes the princess again at the end of the story, and the young King finds duty and duty, pointing in the same direction. Marguerite Clark appears in this lovely production by the courtesy of the Famous Players Film Company, and brings to the screen the qualities of beautiful personality, scholarly training, especially for the role of "The Goose Girl."
