

Stallings Has Made World Beaters of Minor Leaguers

First Two Games of Championship Series a Revelation — Joe Page Writes of Them From the Press Box

(By Joe Page)
Philadelphia, Oct. 9.—By the time this issue of the Evening Times is printed the second game of the world series will have taken place. The Boston Athletics team by its splendid showing is a bigger mystery to the rowing ones than ever before. They are not only beating the Athletics on their own stadium ground, but beating them on the road. The credit for winning the world series must certainly go to little Dick Rudolph, who held the way slugging Athletics to one run, losing them only five hits. Had it not been for his passing of Whitten, the Athletics would have scored at least two runs in the second inning. Baker sent a sky high ball at the Athletics which was caught by Whitten, who tried for third on the catch. It was a splendid and nerve-racking play, and was fully appreciated by the spectators.

In the fifth, Maranville electrified all eyes with a wonderful backward running catch on the left field foul line, while Deal third grabbed another hot grounder from Maranville, cutting off a run. Deal also spoiled a possible rally for the Athletics when he raised McInnis' drive to the outfield. Deal then played with a two base clout.

On the offensive Gowdy was the light particular star for the Braves, getting three hits and a base on balls four times out, driving in one run and getting two across himself, while Maranville was there with two beautiful well placed hits that brought in runs. To tell the truth the Athletics team, while they fielded faultlessly, Barry bringing down the Athletics' wonderful one hand catch in the fifth inning, were completely at the mercy of Fletcher Rudolph, whose slow ball as a complete puzzle to the hitters of the Athletics. While Bender, who had plenty of chances to get to the plate and he grooved it the result was disastrous. Whychoff, who relieved him in the sixth inning, after two were out, did much better, holding his opponents to three hits and no runs.

It would indeed surprise the International League followers of the game, who are not seen the Boston Braves performers—as a great part of the team is made up of ex-International Leaguers to see the improvement made by Stallings and Evers. It must certainly be seen to be appreciated. The idea still prevails that the Athletics will win the series.

Her Second Game
(By Joe Page)
Philadelphia, Oct. 10.—The second game has been fought and won by the Boston Braves in the world series contest. And to say the least it must be limited that Stallings' crew have showed so far that they have it on the side. Elephants in every department of the game. They have clearly outplayed them individually and collectively. Individually they show a snap and vim that is refreshing to see. They show a marked enthusiasm and appetite for the work in front of them, that have simply carried Stallings, Evers and team into the hearts of the real fans, whether they are sitting in the bleachers, press box or governor's chair.

After the fray of today the Boston Braves are looked to make a clean sweep of the series. Philadelphia themselves freely say, "Well, it looks to me over and we will hardly see you back in good old Philly again."

The Athletics in the first two contests have plainly showed that they are without that enthusiastic stimulating lash of the past. While their fielding has been particularly perfect, it is to say the least, is mechanical in effect; while on the other hand, the Braves take to the playing of the game like a duck takes to water. They are all young, aggressive and full of ginger from start to finish. If they strike out, fly out or ground out at first the public know it; they show anger or disappointment over their failure for the minute to make good. The Athletics set under the same conditions in a listless and as if expected far of manner, far different from the Athletics of old.

Coming back to the second game of the series, the credit for winning the game belongs first to James, who pitched one of the great, if not the greatest game of his career. He blanketed the heavy hitting Athletics for the entire nine innings and held them hitless for seven innings, during which time there was not a single man left on the base paths. Some pitching, take it from us! Eddie Plank, during this time, was touched up for five hits. All the same, let it be understood, that the self same Plank was pitching one of the greatest games of his career and deserved to win. But Bill James, with youth, build, speed, curves, splitters and slow ones, was not to be denied, backed, too, by a Snowball infield and outer garden combined in a team that could hit and take every advantage that was to be gained on the base paths. They finally managed to get over the runs that spoiled victory, in the ninth inning. The whole story of the second world series battle lies here. Barry threw out Maranville, Deal came through with a two bagger, which many said Strunk misjudged. (Such is not the case.) Deal then played off second and Schang made a throw to Barry to get him at second. Deal shot down the line to third and Barry stood with the ball in his hand, too late to make the throw. Ty Cobb and others intimated that Byron, the base umpire, stood in the way. The real truth is that Barry rather expected Deal to come back and slide into the ball at second. James then fanned and Mann came through with the hit that scored the only run of the game and the second win of the series for the Stallings' Braves.

The Athletics' only chance came in their half of the ninth. Barry walked and Schang fouled out for Plank, and he was walked. Murphy hit a sharp liner over second, which Maranville grabbed in fine shape and turned what looked like a single into a double play. Stallings, whether he wins or not, has made a world beater of minor league team and can be justly acclaimed the Wellington of baseball.

SOME OF THE REASONS WHY CONNIE MACK SUCCEEDS
Never uses profanity on or off the ball field.
Never uses tobacco or liquor in any form.
Holds daily conferences with his players and points out the mistakes made in the game on the previous day.
Scores every game his team plays and records on his score card every ball pitched.
Never chides a player in angry tones for mistakes, but quietly corrects him when alone.
Has not worn a base ball uniform in nine years and never raises his voice in protest on the field.
Never leaves the bench during the game, conducting his campaign entirely under cover and through his assistants.
He is a firm believer in developing young players by keeping them on the bench to watch the older and more experienced men in action.
He is always on the alert to detect the weakness of opposing batsmen.
Has no hard and fast rule governing old players at the bat.
He lets them use their own discretion.
Doesn't believe in long training trips and doesn't allow his players to do any hard work on these trips. Allows the players to get in shape their own way.

St. John fans who went to Boston to see the Columbus Day game in the World's Series must feel that they got their money's worth. Yesterday's match will be duly recorded as one of the hardest fought battles of the diamond and it was not until the last of the twelfth inning when the Braves added another to the score which in the tenth had been 4 to 4. The results were given in a second edition in the Times. This is a three-

STORIES OF GERMAN SAVAGERY CONFIRMED
Actual Case in Which Hands of Little Girls Were Cut Off
(Toronto Mail and Empire)
Indisputably the mind of Miss Reid, an Ayrshire young lady, who has just arrived in the city to spend a holiday with friends in the East End, is a terrible picture of the horrors of war. A fortnight ago before she left Glasgow, it was her misfortune to look upon two little Belgian mites whose hands had been cut off deliberately by a German sword.

Miss Reid, whose home is in Saltcoats, a district in which she takes considerable interest in social life, one day was overheard by a friend to remark that she did not believe half the stories of German atrocities which were being circulated, and the friend offered to show her proof of the devilish German handiwork. Next day she took Miss Reid to Irving, a few miles distant, and there in two different homes she saw little girls, one aged five the other seven, both of whose hands had been severed at the wrists.

It was such a spectacle that brought out the wish that the brutal Germans had taken the lives of the little children rather than have made them helpless for life and dependent upon charity. Both little victims have been shipped over with a host of other homeless and starving women and children from the land of the plucky Belgians, and it says much

"ONE WONDERFUL NIGHT"

Four-Reel Whirl in New York, by Louis Tracy

There is not a very long time, yet it completely changed the lives of a girl and man. A man's life was ruined by fate, criminals were caught and punished and a battle of wit took place which baffled New York. The pretender to the throne of Hungary needed funds for his intrigues. The Earl of Alton insisted that his daughter marry the Hungarian nobleman. The girl escaped to America. Then the plot thickens. Newspaper men take up the story. Secret detectives, ambassadors and paid assassins from across the water are involved. An interminable tangle, seemingly, but oh what a solution of it all. See it.
