The Chief of Police has laid his anual offering before the Common Council, and has presented a synopsis of the work performed during the past year by undreds which have been told before his command. The statistics, so far as they are calculated to give a correct idea pecially those arrested for the commission of minor crimes, are somewhat unsatisfactory; for although the arrests are carefully detailed it must be remembered that these are greatly in excess of the real number of criminals. Thus, for nstance, there are certain unfortunate individuals classed in the daily reports as old offenders-persons who are periimprisoned, and at the expiration of their imprisonment are again arrested, and pass to the same course with a rcswell the figures and convey an exaggerated idea of our actual crime. In the report for 1872 it is stated that 1,905 men, women and children have been arrested, this number being nearly a fourteenth part of the population of the city, whereas it would be possible for one quarter of the number, were they all 'hard cases," to pass through that num-ber of arrests. As this latter is probably not the case we must, in the absence of more minute calulations, allow a reasonably fair margin when it is necessary to Although the list of offences is sufficiently lengthy, it is pleasing to observe rule of a startling character. No capital offenders are mentioned; there is one case of arson-in which the higher Courts have failed to convict—two cases of forgery, one of concealing the birth of 1,000 child, six of aggravated assault, six of stabbing, two of shooting. The assaults of various kinds number two hundred

In regard to age it seems that the years of offence are from twenty and thirty as the number in that grade is nearly double that of persons between 30 and 40, and very far in excess of the number in any of the other decades. Age is, however, an uncertain thing, as with old offenders it frequently happens that they are entered in the books according to precedents furnished by former arrests, and a man who ten years are entered himself as 50 may have a superson of the same time, producing counter evidence in vindica ion of the morality o the years of offence are from twenty The Evangelical Alliance has publishago announced himself as 50 may have gift enterprises. Our object is enlightenment, as we don't feel bound to accept the ipse dixit of any class of men, without having our own minds throughly convinced, and this can only be done by day.

The nationality is even more unreliable than the age, as the majority of drunken men are judged by their features, voice and general bearing. In consequence of this, many are rated Ireland who were never out of New Brunswick, and so on through the calendar. No sensible person can believe that while the great United States furnished only 59 cases, the little and much belittled Ireland sent 597 or nearly one third of all arrested, and the Provinces of Canada, apart from New Brunswick, gave only 105. The list of 287 persons under 20 shows that the present system of juvenile reform is capable of amendment, and that if humanitains would decrease the old offenders they grow. Considering, however, that Saint John is a seaport town and has only about one policeman to every thousand inhabitants, that there is a large floating population, that bad liquor is freely sold and drank, and that the streets are at night in a state of often absolute sold and drank, and that the streets are at night in a state of often absolute darkness, the record is not alarming; and though it is a fact that a number of bold burglaries have taken place, yet altogether, crime against persons and property has been comparatively small. This speaks well, both for the law-abiding character of our citizens and the activity and energy of our well abused and ill paid policemen of Saint John.

In the first place the individual who receives the grand gift of $10,000 will be in no wise rich. The interest of the amount at 6 per ct., per annum, annument of another tragedy from a sold will be in no wise rich. The interest of the gospel,—we pause to know on which side are the "Blind Guides."

The leading feature throughout the entire "protest," seems to be a fear that the persons becoming rich by the gift enterprise may, at the same time, become rich, would much care for working any more? Another tale of manslaughter comes from Boston. It is but a repetition of a confirmed gambler, are as one to one severely injured. The fire occurred on and will, it must be feared, be told again
A sham brick building of six stories, in A sham brick building of six stories, in which a large number of helpless operatives are at work, is found to be on fire in daylight, and scarcely is the alarm given when the tinder wood-work, rendered doubly combustible by its thin brick casing, is a mass of flame. A panic is prevented by the presence of mind of one strong-willed woman, and the operatives, with, so far as is known one exception, escape without injury. Then comes the tragedy. Relying upon the supposed strength of the walls, the one exception, escape without injury. Then comes the tragedy. Relying upon the supposed strength of the walls, the firemen place their ladders against the billing and ascend. The tinder roof falls in, and the miserable, unbraced eight inch walls quiver for a moment, and fall to the ground in ruins. In a instant, two strong men are ushered into eternity, many more are injured, and it ts feared that under the confused pile of bricks and mortar other insensible forms may yet be lying. So much for these buildings, which by a criminal parsimony of their owners are constructed as if for the sole purpose of destruction of human life, on the slightest cause being given. When will men take warning by these oft repeated tales of sorrow? When will they sacrifice gaudy appearance to substantiality, and when cease, to be, through avarice, the culpable authors of wholesale manslaughter? A man who builds a brick building six stories high with eight inch walls should be punished by law, and the walls should be punished by law, and the mans of the most of them retained sufficient presence of mind to accend through the roof and eacape by means of the roof of an adoutleant, the roof of an adoutleant, the roof of an adoutleant that in which the clergy regarding the advanced social position they should occupy, over the Fishermen of sallies; nor do we hold that the merhantic prosecuting an immoral business, when he hazards his wealth to create when the total to suppose of destruction of human life, on the slightest cause being given.
