

INTRODUCTION.

It is not the object of this bulletin to give a complete account of all the methods used in the production of tobacco seedlings by the various tobacco growing countries. Only a brief reference is made to the latter, and the author passes on at once to a full discussion of the methods which have been shown by an experience of six years to be the best adapted to the climatic conditions of Canada.