FEBRUARY.—We read somewhere lately what seemed to be an answer to the question, why farming does not pay with many that are engaged in it. In the judgment of the writer, who seemed to give the results of his own observation, it is because many farmers raise too few kinds of stock. The farmer that raises nothing but corn and hogs can never expect to make as much money as the farmer that devotes his time to the care of horses, cattle, sheep, hogs and poultry, and to the raising of wheat, corn, clover, potatoes and fruit. Such an one has always plenty of work all the year round, and always something that will bring a fair and remunerative price. Some of his products may be low in price, but others may be high, and he will generally have a remunerative profit.
