

UNTO DEATH.

Look!
A gaunt, shambling wolf which has been making erratic circles on the prairie suddenly stops, lifts his nose high above the grass, and snuffs the air in every direction.

Hark!
A long-drawn howl—a sound which taps on your nerves and brings a chill. The honest growl of the tiger would be music in comparison. It has no honest echo, but you hear the r-r-r-r sneaking across the half-mile of prairie to find evil company in the thickets beyond.

See!
The echo is hardly lost in the pines before it is caught up and sent back from a dozen throats, and a moment after a pack of wolves break cover and race across the grass to join the lone animal which sent forth the rallying call.

Skulking—malignant—devilish! There are beasts which will look you square in the face. The wolf never does. Restless—eyes—uneasy bodies—lolling tongues—yellow fangs!

There they go!
The pack head across the prairie to the south, sniffing at the summer breeze as they run, and at each long leap their eyes grow fiercer and clots of foam fly from their red mouths to blotch the velvet grass. It is a trail they are following, and the scent is fresh.

Come on!
It is a strange sight which meets our eyes. Lying stark and stiff on the prairie, fingers clutching the grass and a look of agony on the face already turning purple under the hot sun, is the body of a hunter. Dead? No need to ask that when you have seen the terrible hole in the breast and the blood which has welled out and soaked the grass and changed the color of the flowers. His rifle lies at his side—his pack at his head. No accident! Perhaps yes—perhaps no. There is one who could tell us if he could but speak.

"Here, dog!"
Lying beside the dead—rising quickly up as we approach—is the hunter's friend and companion—a grand old dog. He looks straight into our eyes. If we have come to bury the dead with kind hands, it is well. If we have come to rob the master—beware! There is Courage and Fidelity and Determination.

Hush! The dog wheels about and faces the north. A sound has reached his ears which sets his eyes a flame and raises every hair on his back. Yelp! yelp! yelp! It is the wolves—the pack which picked up the trail he had made as he went to the north in search of water.

Now watch!
There are twenty to one, and the scent of the dead adds to their fierceness and daring, but as they advance to within ten paces of the dog every wolf comes to a stop. Standing with his fore paws in the breast of the corpse, the dog growls a warning at each and every one before them. He could run away and save his life, but the base idea never comes to him.

He will fight the whole pack—he will die defending his dead!

See! The wolves huddle together for a moment, as if in consultation, and then they break up and form a circle about their victims. The dog wheels slowly, growling his wrath and uttering his defiance. Even now he could break through and escape, but he will not. Of a sudden the leader of the pack dashed at him, but he returns to the circle—whipped—bleeding—vengeful. His place is filled by three companions, and for a moment the corpse is hidden from view and the uproar is frightful.

Grand old dog! They have tasted of his blood, but he has sent them crawling back. Placing his paws again on the breast of the dead he growls defiance to the last.

It is over! At a signal the whole circle close in, and the struggle is ended and the feast begins. There is a tearing of flesh—a low growl of satisfaction—and it is scarcely five minutes before the last wolf has vanished from sight, leaving only the stains of blood on the grass for the vultures to look down on.

PEARLS OF TRUTH.

Courage is fire, and bullying is smoke. There is no magic like sweet, cheery words.

Nature, like man, sometimes weeps for gladness.

The worst men are those who stir up others to do evil.

Justice is the bread of nations; they are always famishing for it.

The truly wise man should have no keeper of his secrets but himself.

It is easier to suppress the first desire than to satisfy all that follow it.

He is the happiest, be he king or peasant, who finds peace in his home.

When you bury an old animosity never mind putting up a tombstone.
