HEADACHE
Is dependent on nervous debility, caused by deranged nerve centres at the base of the brain. THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN NERVE TONIC will give immediate relief and specifically effect a radical cure. This remedy is a truly wonderful Nerve Food and health builder. It is delicious to the taste.

FEIENSWOOD, Indiana, June 8th, 1893.
For a number of years I have suffered intensely with nervous and sick headache had hot flashes, was sleepless and became dependent. Some of my friends spoke so highly of SOUTH AMERICAN NERVE TONIC that I was induced to buy a bottle—that purchase led to a few others, and now I sleep soundly, feel buoyant, strong and vigorous. I would not be back in the condition I was in when I began taking this medicine for any sum you could name.

HOW CHARLIE STUCK TO HIS POST.

(By Lieut. William R. Hamilton, Fifth Artillery, U. S. A.)
"O papa, I want to go with you. It is such fun down on the old wharf, and that queer old Sergeant Bader said if I would come again he would give me some fishine and hooks, and I could catch fish enough for dinner. Do let me go. Can't I? and Charlie's merry brown eyes looked so eager that it was no use for father to try to resist him."

So, looking over the breakfast-table to the boy's mother, Captain Douglas said, "Do you wish him for anything today my dear?"

"No, Arthur! I have nothing for him to do to do as this is his last day of vacation I think he might go. But do be careful, and do not let him get near any of the convicts. The last time, that horrid man was so long a term to serve that you called him a convict. You called him engaged in quite a long conversation."

Charlie glanced at his mother with happily sparkling eyes, as he said: "I won't spend any of them, I promise. Thank you mamma. Thank you, papa. I'll go and get ready, and I left the room, to change his clothes and to get Mary, the cook, to bring him a small lunch with his gun."

On a point of land once the harbor of N. B.—stood an old fort, one of the strongest in the world, but of little avail in these days of great rifled cannon. So to Captain Douglas had been assigned the disarmament of the fort and the removal of its guns. To do the work a party of ten military convicts, under a guard of three soldiers, had been sent from the great military prison. The work had been going on for some time under charge of old Sergeant Bader, and it required only a visit every few days on the captain's part.

Charlie and his father were soon ready and reached the fort in about twenty minutes. The gang of convicts, under a guard of three soldiers, had been sent
on the captain's part.

on the captain's part.

"Well, I see that is the last of the guns on the ground. We shall have to dismount these on the second tier now.
Have you the implements all ready?"

"Yes, sir, replied the sergeant; but will the captain have the ammunition taken away from the casemates where the men are, before taking down the guns?"

"Yes, I forgot about that. Take it out, and put it in the magazines at the north end of the casemate now that we clear the party. You will not require all the powder, so send three men and one guard upstairs, and I will rig the derrick up for lowering the guns. You may take the other two guards and seven convicts, and go to the ammunition store."

"Very well, sir; but shall I send Hogan, or keep him with me?"

"Send him above, where I can watch him," replied the captain, as he lifted Charlie out of the cart. Carry that box of dynamite upstairs the first thing, and then the magazine at the end of the casemate. It will be safe there, and you will have everything else put away, you can carry it down to the magazine."

In a few moments more the parties were at work. The sergeant, with seven men, were taking out boxes packed with large and canister and shells for the guns, and were carrying them down to the magazine at the end of the casemate.
One guard stood with loaded gun at the end of the first case mate, where the boxes of ammunition lay piled up, and the other stood near the magazine, at the other end of the row, so that not a movement could be made by the convicts, without being seen. Upstairs, on top of the fort, the three convicts, one of them being Hogan, were busily engaged under Captain Douglas, in rigging up the derrick tackle. A guard stood near by on one side, where he could see them plainly.

For a while Charlie stayed down below in the sea-wall, where he could watch the big waves coming rolling in from the ocean beyond; but soon tiring of that, he went upstairs to where his father was. The work went on merrily for a half hour or so, when the captain, turning to the guard said: "I am going downstairs for a few moments. Watch these men carefully, and do not let them go near the tower.
Stay here, Charlie, and be went down to the second floor to see how the work was progressing there."

As he disappeared down the tower Hogan looked at Charlie, and grinning at him in his usual engaging manner, beckoned to him to come near. Charlie remembered his promise, and at first did not stir; but Hogan repeating his gestures, he thought that possibly something was the matter, first looking across at the guard, who nodded his head, he went to the convict without speaking.

"Charlie, will you be after don't you favor, and bring me that fish-cord about there on the gun?"

Running there was no harm in that; and surely over to the gun on the other side of the fort, he got the cord and brought it to Hogan, who began to fasten together parts of the large rope around, with the derrick.

While he was thus engaged, Captain Douglas came upstairs, and had just reached the top when everyone was startled by a loud call: "Halt! halt!" followed by a shot or two and noise of burrying and scuffling.

"Watch here, Charlie, called out Captain Douglas, as he rushed downstairs with drawn revolver.

What a sight met his eyes! One of the guards was lying prone and senseless on the floor, while the other one was struggling with three of the convicts, who were trying to sweep his gun and cartridge belt from him, and was unable to resist. The old sergeant with drawn revolver was holding at bay the remaining four convicts, while yelling at the top of his voice for assistance. But he had his back turned towards the struggling convicts, and was unable to help him without letting his party of four get away.

One sweeping glance revealed the whole situation to the captain, and rushing towards the group struggling with the guard, who in another moment would have wrested his gun from him, he commanded: "Stand up, you scoundrels! Back there, every one of you to that exit!"

Before that powerful voice and commanding figure, whose blazing eyes shone forth with a resolution that could not be withstood, and the cocked revolver that he held in his right hand, the three convicts backed sullenly till they were united with the four in the corner under the sergeant's revolver.

"Load your gun quickly, Robinson, and stand guard over these men. Do not let one of them stir out of the corner and shoot the first one of them that rises from the floor. Down all of you on the floor. How did this happen, sergeant?" and the captain, having secured the convicts went to the prostrate figure of the other guard near the magazine.

"That man Myers, sir, he went up to the guard there, sir, Jas. and was asking him questions, when Kelly came and hit him over the head with a large grape-shot and took his gun. The fear of them then made a rush on me but I got the drop on Kelly and shot him in the arm, and he let go of the gun and I got them all in the corner. The other guard Robinson was fired at Kelly also but missed him, and before he could reload his gun the three of them near him jumped on him."

While he was talking, the captain examined the unconscious guard, and as the sergeant finished, he said: "This man is badly hurt, I am afraid. He must be taken to the hospital without delay. Is Kelly hurt much?"

"No, sir, much is the pity, sir. Only a little hurt. He had a killed him," replied the excited sergeant.

"Sergeant, you must take this man to the hospital at once. Take Kelly with you, and have him examined also.
And march Myers ahead of you, and if he tries to run, shoot him with mercy. Robinson, you go along behind the cart, and guard both Kelly and Myers. That wounded man into the cart and drive as fast as you can without danger to him. I will say here till you return. Report to the colonel, and bring back two more guards with you. Leave Myers in the guard house at the post."

Setting his actions to his words the captain took his place in front of the row thoroughly cowed and ordered Kelly and Myers to rise and step to the front, where they were at once covered by the muzzle of Robinson's loaded gun. The wounded man was carried downstairs and Robinson both Kelly and Myers followed; but it was not till the cart and driver as fast as you can

"The poor father's heart sank within him. Unable to leave his present possition without the convicts, he could not march them upstairs ahead of him.
"Are you safe, my father?" he asked.

"Yes, safe as can be," the boy replied, and I'll blow them up if they did."

in his hands! It would blow up the whole fort, convicts and all, but it was not of himself that he thought, but of his boy, his pride, who was so dear to his mother. The cold sweat broke out all over him, and for an instant or two he was tempted to let his convicts go, and rush himself to his boy's support.

But the soldier instinct at once asserted itself, and with a short and silent prayer to the Almighty, he called out again: "Hold fast, my boy, and do not let them get near you. I can't leave them now, but soon the sergeant will be here with more guards." Stick it on a little longer. You are doing bravely, my little man, and your father is proud of you. You are a soldier's boy, remember!"

"I will, father," but the voice was not so strong as it was a little while before.
How long the hour that followed seemed to the agonized father! Every little while he would call out encouragingly to Charlie, and the boy responded in some manner, but his voice was growing faint-er; and once he said, "My head aches awfully badly."

Only a few moments more, my boy.
And in a few moments more he heard the sound of wheels, and then the quick hurried rush and regular tramp of mountain, the well known tones of his lieutenant, and the steady and quick tread of the soldiers as they came in on double time.

"This way, Hallock; this way, and quickly," he cried.

"All right, captain," responded the lieutenant from below, and the next moment he was bounding up the stairs four at a time, and followed by all the company, who having heard that their beloved captain was hurt, had turned out in strength to wreak vengeance on the convicts.

As he entered the casemate, the captain said: "Two men guard these villains; the rest of you follow me." And down the stairs he rushed to the tower, and up four steps at a bound until he stood on the top.

A glance showed him all—his brave boy leaning against the tower wall, deathly pale, but with a grim determination stamped on his boyish face, as he held in each hand a cartridge of the fearful explosive, with the open box below.

As he caught sight of his father his eyes lighted once more; and he cried faintly: "All right, father, they couldn't pass. I—I—I, and overcome by the fumes of the material that
