Boeten. " Tell him I am dead."

Then like a dream, appears this day,
And years have swiftly sped;
When age both mark'd with care life's way, Then weep, for "I am dead."

Think how I once was gay, and smil'd And how that hour has fled, That earth upon my grave is pil'd. "Tie long that "I am dead." A mother's love did sooth my life evening, and serenaded half the night, She, of all others, to jilt me—to elope—to run away, and with such a fellow as Bob,—a fool, an idiot.—Alas! They say

"Jove hughs ex lovers' perjusies."

The old fellow must keep up a terrible giggling. I went home Melancholy, as may well be imagined; it is no slight thing to a sensitive man, like me, to be jilted, after a six weeks honest and faithful courtship. I doubted in what way to commit suicide. Arsenic is very disagreeable; hanging is so abominably vulgar; and as for stabbing and eticking, that is too much like the way they kill calves and sheep.

At ten o'clock, I stood with George P. Marianna's brother, and my most particular friend.

"George, I am going to kill myself."

"You had better not. Frank—take a glass of wine."

"To give you a long description of the city of the calculation of the city of the calc
