Canada's Greatest Naval Station - The Cemetery, Citadel and Dockyards - A Beautiful Park - The Nova Scotia License Act and How it Works.

No. 4. The vicinity of a cemetery is conducive to meditation. While looking at these crumbling old gravestones, many of which have stood for considerably more than a century, I thought of the many changes they have witnessed, and the events big with importance in the world's history which have occurred since they were erected. Here they stood, some of them, when the American colonies gained their independence and became a nation; when Nelson won the Nile and met his glorious death at Trafalgar; when brave Broke of the Shannon brought his prize the Chesapeake into this same harbor; when Bonaparte was conquering Europe with the armies of Republican France; and when he was finally routed at Waterloo, and sent to die in exile at St. Helena. Here they stand, mute witnesses of events that have changed the destinies of nations.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE which cannot be said to have any pretensions to architectural beauty. It is situated toward the citadel we passed St. Mary's R. C. cathedral, a remarkably handsome church, in the florid Gothic style, though its beauties were somewhat marred by a staging around the spire, where some repairs were going on. Proceeding up the street we soon came to the citadel hill, which was climbed until close up to the top of the glacis and was rewarded by a splendid view in every direction.

THE CITADEL itself, which occupies a most commanding position, is on the summit of the hill on which the town is chiefly built, and is said to have been commenced by the Duke of Kent, father of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, who was at one time commander of the forces on this station. It commands not only the harbor but the country in every direction, and would appear to be almost impregnable to assault. Visitors are not now admitted inside since two enterprising Yankee reporters obtained admission inco, and wrote up the place for some American paper. The view from the glacis is particularly fine. Looking north, we saw the various barracks, naval dockyard, arsenal, military hospital, &c. On the opposite side of the harbor lies the little town of Dartmouth, which was the scene of a massacre of Acadian settlers by Indians in 1761. Looking to the south and east were Fort Clarence, George's and McNab's islands which are strongly fortified and entirely command the approaches. Further out on the western shore was Chebucto Head, with the strong fort of the York Redoubt, while beyond all the broad Atlantic, dotted with sails, was sparkling in the sunlight. A hostile fleet would have a tough job in forcing an entrance into the harbor. They would first encounter the fire of the forts on Meagher's beach, with a plunging crossfire from the York Redoubt, next would come the fire of Fort Clarence and McNab's, and George's islands, which are simply immense earthworks mounting the heaviest guns, with raking fire from the Point Pleasant batteries, and the citadel. By the time they reached the inner harbor they would be pretty well riddled. I was struck by

THE SCARCITY OF SHIPPING in the harbor, hardly anything but coasters and a couple of Allan liners being visible. The last time I was here was in '64, when the American war was at its height. The place was then full of shipping, and was the great rendezvous for blockade runners, large numbers of which were fitted out here to run the Wilmington and Charleston blockades. I think, in '62 that the Confederate cruiser Tallahassee was blockaded in here by a Yankee squadron, but, taking advantage of a dark night eluded her pursuers and got safely away. While taking in the view we saw the 84th regiment, headed by their fine band, marching from the citadel to church, while a detachment of artillerymen went in another direction. Leaving the citadel we next directed our steps towards

THE PUBLIC GARDENS, which are justly regarded as the pride of the Halifaxians. The grounds, which occupy several acres, are beautifully laid out, and are the favorite resort of the citizens. In the artificial lake are numerous kinds of waterfowl, including black swans, which I had never before seen but in Australia. We strolled about for some time enjoying the many beauties of the place, until a certain inward consciousness warned us that it was time to return to the hotel for dinner. After our forenoon's walk we felt inclined for a glass of ale to refresh us before dinner, and enquired of the clerk where the bar was. He informed us that it was never opened. Here was a revelation! We had struck an snag this time evidently. Was the Scott Act in force here? Oh! no, but the Nova Scotia License Law was. This law provided that hotels shall not sell less than a pint, to be consumed off the premises, and to guests of the house only at table. Being the guests of the house we were admitted by the doorkeeper down a passage and into a room plainly furnished with chairs and tables. A boy appeared and took our order, which was passed through a window from another room, which was deemed to be the bar, but never saw the inside of it. We were now initiated and had the password, so to speak. After dinner we took the street cars for

POINT PLEASANT PARK, which is a lovely place, situated on the point which divides the harbor proper from the Northwest arm. The roads here and, in fact, all about the suburbs, were so beautifully laid out and smooth, no bicycles, which appear to be some what scarce here, as we only saw one during our stay. On our way to the cars we observed in the distance along Barrington street a considerable crowd on the sidewalks and in the middle of the street a large body of men, &c., in red; we also heard the distant strains of martial music. Supposing it to be the 84th in church parade, we concluded to wait and see them pass. On a close approach the scarlet coats resolved themselves into red jerseys, while the want of military precision in the steps, together with the great preponderance of noise over music in the alleged band; at once revealed their true character, and the GREAT SALVATION ARMY stood confessed. The din of the brazen instruments, aided by drums and banjos, together with the howling of the converted, was something almost appalling, and I now understood the Scriptural passage "terrible as an army with banners." The banners were numerous if not costly, for every member carried one, each bearing some motto, such as "Are you sanctified?" "Halleluiah for Jesus!" "Hail to our King," with other neat and appropriate sentiments too numerous to mention. Monday morning we decided to pay a flying visit to Dartmouth, so crossing the harbor by the ferry, were soon strolling around that suburb. The view of the city and harbor, with a portion of the Bedford Basin, as seen from the north of the town, is a fine one. There are one or two yacht building yards, besides various industries, such as rope works, &c., indigenous to a seaport town. Returning to the ferry we enjoyed another pleasant sail across the harbor to the city. After leaving the ferry boat, we noticed what appeared to be a saloon contiguous to the ferry wharf, and deeming it expedient in the public interest to investigate the working of this

NOVA SCOTIA LICENSE LAW, besides feeling dry, we entered. The interior was fitted up in the usual style, with its customary adjuncts of business. We called for a glass of ale each, and the result was just what I had anticipated; we were supplied without hesitation, as were several others while we stood there taking observations. And just here I would beg leave to make a slight digression, to moralize a little on the absurdity of some of the crank legislation with which our unhappy country is at present cursed. I am no advocate of intemperance, nor have I any love for liquor, but I have an Englishman's in-born love of personal liberty and the right of private judgment, and of the right which every man has to be a law to himself in matters of personal habit.

DRUNKENNESS SHOULD BE DISCOURAGED by every means possible, even to the extent of punishing it as a crime; but the sober and temperate man should not be put in the same category with the habitual toper. The mistake which the so-called "temperance" people everywhere make is in putting the saddle on the wrong horse; in other words, the degraded wretch who starves his family in order to indulge his depraved craving for liquor, in held up as a "frightful example," and patted on the back as a "victim," while the man who may be in any way connected with the liquor business, however respectable, is branded as a criminal of the deepest dye. This N. S. license law was designed by wise-acres who framed it with the same intent as the Scott Act, viz., to close the saloons, and place the trade in responsible hands. Its effect has been precisely the opposite, to take away a legitimate adjunct of

THE BUSINESS OF RESPECTABLE HOTELS, which are run at large expense for the proper accommodation of the travelling public, and to throw it into the hands of the saloons and "dives" which do a booming business, regardless of the law. The sum and substance of the whole matter fits just this; the endeavor to prevent the retail sale of liquor by such abortive schemes as the Scott Act or Nova Scotia license law, while the wholesale trade is legalized and the manufacture and importation are unchecked, is about as sensible and as logical as would be an attempt to dam the Niagara rapids with a pitchfork. In any of my "temperance" friends want a little "horse sense" to digest, at the leisure they can have this without extra charge. I am not a theorist, nor have I any sentimental abstract ideas on this question; I draw my conclusions from observation and experience, backed by a tolerable knowledge of human nature, gained by rubbing shoulders with the world at large for some years.
