The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

"Well, I'd just like to know what Evelyn Berkely has to be so stuck-up and exclusive about!"

"Is she stuck-up?"

"Well, I should say so. The other day she sat down beside me in the train by mistake, and then she looked as glum as an oyster. And she hardly said a word all the way. She just makes me sick! What if her grandfather did write a few books! That's no reason for her to set herself up above everybody. And besides we all know who her mother was. I think that ought to humble her a little."

I heard that conversation about a week ago.

Yesterday, strangely enough, I heard another conversation between the much censured Evelyn and a girl friend.

Said the girl friend, "Evelyn Berkely, why didn't you talk more at the reception the other night? I watched you and you hardly said a word the whole evening. Do you think that's a nice way to act when you promised me you'd try to talk more?"

Said Evelyn, "Oh, dear, I knew you would be disgusted with me, Janice, and I did try, but you don't know how difficult it is for me to make small talk with people. I don't know very well. I'm always meeting people that I know slightly on the train going back and forth to work, and I feel I ought to talk to them, yet I can't think of a thing to say. And I just sit there stiff and stupid and hate myself. You have a natural social gift Janice and you don't know how hard it is to be born shy and self conscious."

I wonder what the parties of the first conversation would have said if they could have heard the second. I have quoted the two at such length, because it seems to me that they expose with singular clearness one of the most common of all the misjudgments of our fellow creatures of which we are guilty—namely, the misinterpretation of diffidence and shyness as pride and exclusiveness.

Many a girl—and a man too, for that matter—who suffers torture in her efforts to overcome her inborn diffidence is further punished for her misfortune by dislike and avoidance on the part of those who misinterpret her shyness and self-consciousness as snobbishness and disagreeable pride.

Now, I think almost everyone has diffident moods—moods when he suddenly finds himself out of tune with the universe and unable to enter into natural converse with those he ordinarily treasures and enjoys.

Surely you have had this experience. You knew people were thinking you diffident and disagreeable. You wanted to get back to our natural self and yet you were helpless. There you were marooned on a cold little island of self, ignorant how you came there, totally incapable of getting off or even of signaling your unhappy state to the mainland.

By and by the overtired condition, the preoccupation or the anxiety that cast you on that island was relieved, and you found yourself once more on the pleasant mainland of happy human intercourse.

Surely, then you paused and thought a moment of the unfortunate people with whom the condition of shyness, diffidence and lack of harmony with the universe was the rule, and anything else the exception.

If you didn't, you will next time, won't you?

And thus turn your painful experience to good, by letting it teach you not to misinterpret shyness and diffidence as arrogance or unamiability.

The Delayed Express.

The express that left Port aux Basques last Wednesday arrived here at 11.10 this morning. Conductor Noseworthy reports as hard a time on account of snow as ever he experienced in mid-winter, only that the weather was not quite so cold. Shortly after the train pulled out of Port aux Basques the weather set in to drift and snow, so that the progress was so poor that the train did not get to North Branch till 6 in the evening. There all progress was stopped by the heavy snow banks on the road and the train was stalled in the snow for the night. A relief train started from Port aux Basques next morning with 25 snow shovellers and did not reach the stalled express till Thursday. At 2 p.m. this train was free and left North Branch and coming slowly to Bay of Islands. The progress was very slow through the snow and drift till they reached Kitty's Brook, where the track to Norris' Arm had been cleared by the plow that went west yesterday.
