Monastir and Roumania.

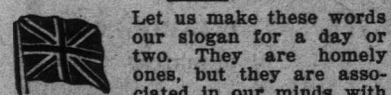

It is rarely that the news contains at the same time such cause for satisfaction and for apprehension as it does this morning, leaving it undecided how far the good and the bad neutralise or outweigh one another. The good news is of course, that of the recapture of Monastir; the bad that of the enemy advance into Roumania which has gained very dangerous headway. It is a pity that there is not a more intimate connection between the two. They are ultimately parts of one great whole, which we may call the Balkan campaign, but at present, as has so often been the case, time is of the essence of the position, and there is a fear that Falkenhayn will be able to do great damage before any threat from south or north distracts him from his purpose.

From every point of view, sentimental and practical, military and moral, the taking of Monastir is a fine contribution to the success of our cause. It was promised by the late successes of the French and Serbians, but the fulfilment of the promise has been made with pleasant suddenness. The fact emphasises the importance under modern conditions of warfare of outlying defensive positions to which little attention is paid by the general public but which are in truth so often the keys to a great objective. From a military point of view Monastir will be of much value, and we shall be surprised if we do not at once hear that the French centre has begun to move up the Vardar. The city will make an admirable base from which to carry on the covering and assistant operations on the flank, a junction of the two forces would be a fine feat, spelling the almost certain reconquest of Serbia.

Turning, however, to this morning's news of Roumania, we have much to think seriously about. From Orsova to Craiova runs a most important railway line (vital arteries railway lines are nowadays) through the heart of Wallachia. The Germans claim to have reached it and the news lately received lends colour to their claim. The fact by itself would not matter so much, but in conjunction with the deep incursions of the enemy in the north about Compiègne, it is a grave threat indeed not merely to the Roumanian army centred about Orsova but to the whole Roumanian position. There is no need at present to indulge in gloomy speculation, but no one, cognisant of the facts and of the disposition of the contending armies, can fail to perceive the gravity of our ally's predicament.

He is a wise man, however, who has breadth enough of view and sufficient foresight accurately to appraise such a situation as this. Comparing the two campaigns, while we see in the taking of Monastir the first invaluable step in what may well be the deciding operations of the whole war, we are forced to admit that the success of the enemy in its even more strategic value, it is a more present danger and it is far more capable of a concentrated pursuit to the end. But even then, and allowing the utmost to the enemy, can practically achieve, which would be the rolling up of the entire southern Roumanian army, a wide view shows us that this need not mean disaster. True, it would mean the flanking of Russia and the strengthening of German communications with the east, but it is effectively countered at the same time by an advance in force all along the Macedonian front by the Allies. It would be robbed of much of its effect and even possibly turned to the enemy's disadvantage. The bottleneck would still be there and still be narrow, and the narrowing from that direction would mean the impeding of the Constantinople communications, worse served than our own. To use the other figure that is so popular, the millstones would still grind, with most of the work done by the lower instead of the upper one. How far this may be correct, and how far either optimistic or pessimistic anticipation are justified, will be apparent at once in the events of the very near future.

FISH and BREWIS.

Let us make these words our slogan for a day or two. They are homely ones, but they are associated in our minds with the boys across the water, to whom homely messages and homely gifts are ever the most welcome. Lately a brave number of them performed a brilliant feat, described in part by the proud letter to the Governor from Brigadier General Cayley, and are more than ever deserving of our gratitude and remembrance. There is no more grateful form of remembrance, according to the invariable testimony of those who know, than a gift of something good to eat. And what does a Nfld. boy better to eat than fish and brewis? The patriotic dish was one creditable to its author. It was at first thought the money necessary to the object could be got by a few large donations, but the committee appointed to raise it have very wisely decided that an appeal should be made as public and as wide as possible. Large donations are, of course, very valuable, but every dollar and every cent will add to the enjoyment of some brave lad or other. No subscription will be too small for acceptance, and in fact small subscriptions are specially invited when larger ones are not possible. We should think, too, that everyone in the island would take keen pleasure in helping to provide our brave boys with the luxury so beloved by them but so unfamiliar where they are. Let everyone, therefore, send in his or her subscription to Mr. C. P. Ayre, and send it at once. The sum of $2,500 is aimed at and it is wanted immediately, if the consignments are to reach its destination by Christmas. This should be easy if all who wish to give will give without delay.

Pt. Phil. Jensen's Lecture Last Night.

Every available seat was occupied at the Casino Theatre last night when hundreds turned out to listen to the address given by Private Phil. Jensen. Included in the number were the Premier, J. and Mrs. Browning, R. B. Job and many other prominent citizens. The Chair was occupied by Mr. W. W. Blackall, who introduced the young soldier. Pte. Jensen in his usual descriptive and forcible manner pointed out the many great things the Allies have accomplished, also the many other greater things that remained undone, for which Britain needed men and still more men. In brief he related his experiences in travelling around our island, and the encouragement of the people in various districts, and he regretted that the response from some was far behind the average. The men in the trenches are calling for support and we at home should realise the duty we owe the men who are fighting our battles by encouraging every young man to enlist and answer the call. In closing he made a strong plea to the parents and sweethearts and others having influence over the young men to urge them on to enlist. Pte. Jensen, who during the past eight months has lectured on more platforms in this country than any other public speaker, and who has addressed thousands of people in the interest of the Red Cross and Recruiting Committees, leaves shortly for his home where we earnestly hope he will be fully restored to his former health. Mrs. Blackall, who also got in some good work while recruiting along the South West Coast and other parts of the country, pointed out the need of more volunteers and for the honor of the Flag of Newfoundland he sincerely hoped the men would come forward. The C. L. B. Band was in attendance and rendered several patriotic airs.

McMurdo's Store News

MONDAY, Nov. 20, 1916.
Among toilet perfumes we have to our Lavender Water, made from genuine Mitcham Lavender Oil and matured for months until the peculiar fragrance of the petals are brought out to the full. The odor of this carefully made product of our laboratory has a body that cheaper lavender waters lack, and the perfume is distinctly pleasant as well as a lasting one. Price 65c a bottle.
Pine is the concentrated essence which makes a popular household cough remedy. A sixty cent bottle makes a 10 oz. quantity of cough mixture, is of even more strategic value, it is a more present danger and it is far more capable of a concentrated pursuit to the end. Alleged Smuggling.

We hear that it is the intention of the Customs authorities to institute legal proceedings against a well-known shopkeeper on Water Street. It is alleged that a certain foreigner, who is a collector for another well-known business firm, visited the store of the former a few days ago and asked for a package if imported cigarettes which were handed to him and—c—was paid the shopkeeper. The customer noticed by a stamp that was on the package that the cigarettes were contraband and, so the story goes, immediately reported the matter to the Customs.

Obituary.

Mr. John Maher, caretaker at the Agriculture and Mines Department, died suddenly of heart failure at his home on Gower Street this morning. His brother Frank died a few months ago under similar circumstances. At that time John was also stricken, rallied, though ever since he had been engaging the constant attention of physicians. Deceased was well known in the community. He is survived by a widow and four children. Rev. A. J. Maher is a brother. Much sympathy will go out to the bereaved ones.

WM. JAMES SWANBOROUGH.

There passed peacefully to rest last evening at the ripe age of 87 an old and respected resident of Topsail in the person of Wm. James Swansborough, Esq., J.P. Mr. Swansborough was born in England and came to this colony as a young man. For many years he laboured as teacher and lay reader of the Episcopal Church of which he was a faithful and devoted follower. His wife predeceased him some years ago. He is survived by 3 daughters and many grand-children, two of whom with the Vld. Contingent at the front. Many in this city will remember with pleasure the happy days spent at his well appointed home "Palmetto Villa" Topsail. A useful life is well ended and it is safe to say there was no "meaning of the bar" when he put out to sea.

Train Notes.

Fine Feat of the Nfld. Regiment.

The Only Real Success of the Day—Letter from Brig-General Cayley to His Excellency the Governor.

88th Infantry Brigade, B.E.F., October 28th, 1916.

Your Excellency—

I have much pleasure in writing to you again to tell you of the great deeds of the Newfoundland Regiment on 12th October.

The Division was suddenly moved down from the part of the line they were holding.

Quite unexpectedly the 88th Brigade was detached from the Division, and temporarily lent to another Division, and at once on arriving on the Somme front were put into the line, with orders to attack the German trenches in their front.

As far as this Brigade was concerned, the attack was entirely successful. The Newfoundland Regiment carried out their part most brilliantly with the utmost dash and determination.

Nothing could have been finer than their behaviour, and they fairly got into the Germans, killing large numbers and capturing many others. They also captured three machine guns, which, I have applied, should be handed over to the Newfoundland Government as trophies. The Regiment's losses were serious, but very slight considering the important success won and the heavy losses in killed on the enemy.

The success was the more gratifying as it was the only real success recorded on that day.

It was followed up a few days later by another equally important success on the part of this Brigade. As a result we feel now that we have done something to wipe out the failure of the 1st July, and in this our first real chance in France have proved ourselves better men than the Germans.

In consequence everyone is full of cheerfulness and confidence in spite of the most vile weather conditions.

Captains March and Butler did particularly good service, and I have had the pleasure of sending their names forward for mention or reward.

We all deplore the loss of those gallant officers Capt. Donnelly and O'Brien, both of whom all through this war had proved themselves again and again as being the most stout hearted of men. Lieut. Cliff is a heavy loss to the Regiment; he had the makings of a fine officer. Norris, too, was held in the highest regard; and Ebsary was a veteran and a real soldier.

Since the action large drafts of nearly 500 men have joined the Regiment, whom I inspected a few days ago. I was immensely struck with the stamp of men they were, and feel confident that when called upon they will gloriously uphold the splendid reputation their Regiment has gained.

I beg to congratulate you on the grand services to the Empire which your gallant Regiment has rendered.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) D. E. CAYLEY,
Brigadier General,
Commanding 88th Infantry Brigade.

At Cochrane St. Church

Two very practical, inspiring and up to date sermons were delivered in the Cochrane Street Centennial Church yesterday, in the morning, by the Rev. D. B. Hemmison, B.A., from the words, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength," and in the evening, by the Rev. Dr. Bond, from the text, "Is the heart right?" or "Keeping the heart from the Lord." A communication from His Excellency the Governor was read by the Rev. Dr. Bond, giving a splendid account of the bravery of the Newfoundland Regiment. The Pastor announced that several amounts had been added to the Thanksgiving offering of last Sunday, and that the amount had reached the very generous amount of $2,125.00.

British Theatre.

To Be Opened by The Rosaleys. Theatre goers will be delighted to hear that Mr. Jack Rosaley has taken a long leave of the British Theatre, and is returning to the city next Monday. He is having some splendid pictures coming from the best firms and when his alterations are complete the British Theatre will be one of the most up-to-date and comfortable theatres in the city where surprises and novelties will be given patrons. Mrs. Rosaley will be at the theatre on her sixth Christmas production. Something entirely new.
