Funny Jobs, These!WAYS OF EARNING A LIVING—RELATED BY OUR READERS.

In a recent competition on the Editorial page, readers were asked to tell of the most original and curious ways of making a living that have come under their notice. Here is a selection of the quaint jobs mentioned in the replies:

A man in the North makes a good living by fashioning hand-protectors from the uppers of old boots and selling them to metal-workers.

Another man lives on the tips he receives for acting as a human signal. Each morning he takes up a position near the railway signals. Then as each train is noticed he shouts a warning to those approaching the station: "Hurry up, gentlemen, for such-and-such a train!"

Near Glasgow, a man is employed in wheeling cycles up a steep hill for cyclists who are visiting a beauty-spot at the top.

The filler and lighter of pipes is another "quaint" man. In a large town in Scotland, new tram-lines are being put down. The workmen are allowed to smoke, but are working at such high pressure that they have no time to re-fill their pipes. This man is employed to do it for them!

A job peculiar to certain parts of Wales consists in the gathering of seaweed, which is afterwards boiled, made into a very palatable kind of cake, and sold at fairs.

A Scotsman is engaged in tearing and twisting by hand the fringes of tartan plaids which are worn in certain Highland regiments.

Miners, of course, are not allowed to take smoking materials with them into the pits. In one mining district, a man stands at the colliery gates, and relights cigarettes and a light at a penny a time. The miners readily pay this sum to get a smoke-quickly.

An unemployed commercial artist visits large houses, offering to repair damaged wallpaper. His method is to place a piece of white paper over the damaged portion, and then paint in the appropriate design.

them to local householders to make garden paths.

Rearing snails for human consumption gives employment to a few people in this country.

A Londoner makes a very good living by going round the hotels and collecting the corks from wine bottles. These he sorts out and returns to the wine merchants concerned, receiving as much as sixpence each for certain kinds.

All over the country, men find employment in painting other people's knockers and letter-boxes. Other casual callers ask if the wireless set is working all right—if it isn't, they will put it right for a small fee.

The seller of "carbolic" has given us a new catchword, but the occupation is not so uncommon as it was a year or two ago. A street trader who still has very little competition is he who buys the cloths in which frozen meat is packed, washes them, and sells them to housewives as polishing rags.

Appropos the recent inquiry into alleged irregularities in connection with the sale of surplus Government stock, I recall a story told by Sir Laming Worthington-Evans, our new Postmaster-General.

At the time when he was Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Munitions he was called upon to be present at a sale of a lot of Government mules.

The auction took place in a ring enclosure, access to which was by one small gateway, and considerable amusement was caused amongst the onlookers by the efforts of the man in charge of the animals to induce them to go through it.

One mule especially seemed obstinately bent on doing anything and everything but pass through that gateway.

"Want any help?" shouted one of the by-standers, as the mule-driver rested a moment.

"No," answered the driver, "but I'd like to know how Noah ever got two of these blighters into the Ark!"

William of Germany Still Retains His Autocratic Bearing.

Doorn, July 27.—(A.P.)—William Hohenzollern, once German emperor, to-day in Doorn maintains his imperial airs as of old, according to the recitals of those who from time to time come in contact with him.

The latest story is contributed by a traveling company of student-actors. Augmenting their slender incomes by acting mediaeval mystery plays in various German and Dutch cities, the actors were requested to give a performance at the former emperor's residence. Before doing so they were received by William, and they have since given their impressions of the reception.

First they were instructed how to behave. "Speak to His Majesty just as the words come," said the marshal. "Address him in accordance with his exalted position, and kindly make a very, very low bow."

After being admitted to the house, William and an officer appeared in the hall. One of the students describes William as having haughty movements and superior airs. His eyes are nervous, and a hard, pale grey in color. He has striking grey eyebrows. Lines of age furrow his brow, and his mouth seems extraordinarily sensuous. His beard and moustache have turned grey, and his complexion is unhealthy.

William wore a grey-green field-cape and a green sporting hat. The student thought that civilian dress made him appear bourgeois. His manner of address was sharp and Prussian.

William's folie of omniscience appeared at once in his conversation, and he started right in. "So you are going to offer us mystery plays? They are, of course, the plays that reached such a flourishing condition among the ancient Greeks."

Then the former monarch proceeded to give a history of these plays down to modern times. The marshal whispered delightedly to the student: "The Kaiser knows everything."

In the evening the student-actors played "The Dance of Death" and the lyrical "Paradise Day." Princess Hermine, William's wife, was greatly taken by the plays and as she came on the stage to thank the players, she remarked: "You must come again. Here one perishes intellectually. It is seldom that anything of value is offered to us."

Petrograd, July 25.—(A.P.)—Only two profitable careers are open to Russia's bright young men to-day, and they are speculation or banditry," a bearded old civil engineer told the writer while riding on the train from Moscow to Petrograd the other day.

This engineer, who occupies an important post with the state railway administration, said that he earned a salary which is the equivalent of about $15.00 a month. His son, who is a speculator and admittedly not over scrupulous in the way he turns his profits, makes fifty times that amount.

"Our salaries are so low in the state service that no ambitious young man, particularly if he is married, can reconcile himself to accepting them. Therefore, to win a fortune or live comfortably, he must become one of that hated class in Russia and elsewhere, a speculator. The only other lucrative profession is that of a bandit, or hold-up man."

"People who blame the speculators forget that it probably will be they, with their quickly secured profits and faculty of taking long chances, who will ultimately build up Russia. It is not a long cry from speculating in merchandise to taking a chance on building a railroad or developing a mine. They are the pioneers, breaking away from old Russian traditions and becoming men of business. Exactly the same kind of pioneers or speculators in your Wall Street helped build up America."

Dry crusts of bread can be nicely browned in the oven, and are good eaten with cheese and fruit.

Instead of the usual morning cereal, serve freshly popped corn with maple or brown sugar and milk.
