The case of M. J. Kent vs. John Underhill, a South London traveler, was also called. It was adjourned from the last sitting on account of the non-appearance of W. T. McNeil, a witness. McNeil failed to attend today, and the judge imposed a fine of $5 and ordered that McNeil be committed to jail for two days. The suit arose over a promissory note. Daring Attempt at Robbery.

A daring attempt was made between 1 and 2 o'clock this morning to burglarize the residence of Mr. Robert D. B. Nicholson, Dundas street, between William and Maitland streets. That the attempt was unsuccessful is due to the plucky resistance of the servant girl, whose room the would-be burglar entered. He effected an entrance by placing a ladder against the back kitchen and climbing through a window. Then he groped his way into the servant girl's room, and the noise awakened her. At first she thought one of the household had come to call her, but when she became more fully awake she realized that a strange man was in the room, and she screamed lustily for help. The man then sprang at her and endeavored to gag her with a handkerchief. She resisted stoutly, and the tumult awoke Mr. Nicholson.

The marander then decamped-by way of the second story window—it is supposed. Mr. Nicholson sent in an alarm to the pelice station and a patrol and posse were soon on the spot. They covered the ground thoroughly, but the bird had flown. The man left the handkerchief behind him. The police kept the matter quiet, but the public might as well understand that these dangerous characters are in town and act accordingly. Several attempted entries have been made of late and the city appears to be overrun with tramps. Let Bygones Be Bygones. The Chicago Dispatch says: If Daisy Bell will bring around her bicycle made for two and carry Sweet Marie away with her all will be forgotten.
