The Nature of Aphasia.

N. Y. Herald. The young man who, as recently reported, was lost to himself and his riends because he could not recollect his name or place of residence is said to have been a victim of that curious lisease of the speech centres of the orain called aphasia. It is well known hat in young persons it is frequently aused, as evidently in this instance by excessive or strained mental exertion, while in older individuals it has its origin either in limited apoplexies lue to brittle arteries or to plugging of some of the nutrient vessels of the brain by small blood clots that have escaped in the circulation. Usually when either of the latter conditions exists to any marked degree there is more or less complete paralysis of one
