Our thoughts and speeches in most things run to waste, yea, are defiled: as water spilt in the ground is both lost, cannot be gathered up again, and it is polluted, mingled with dust. But no word spoken to God, from the serious sense of a holy heart, is lost. He receives it and returns it into our bosom with advantage. A soul that delights to speak to Him will find that he also delights to speak to it.

It is no easy thing to carry a very full cup even, and to digest well the fatness of a great estate and great place. They are not to be envied that have them; even though they be of the better sort of men, it is a thousand to one but that they shall be losers by the gains and advancements of this world; suffering proportionably great abatement of their best advantages by their prosperity.

The generality of men while they are at ease, do securely neglect God, and little mind either to speak to Him or to hear him speak to them.
