A CONSTANT PERIL.

Killings and maimings by heavy currents over electric wires continue to occur. A striking instance occurred last week where Charles McKinney, of Woodstock, N.B., was killed by an electric shock while discharging his duty as fireman. This incident is a manifest example of the danger of overhead wires in a city carrying heavy currents. For a time the whole town was in danger, as the power wires became crossed with those of the telegraph and telephone services, and small fires occurred in consequence in several houses. The peril of fire and electric shock did not cease in Woodstock until the current was shut off at its source. It is plain that there is need for our people, and especially our municipal officials, to become better acquainted with electric conditions, which are a menace to life and property.

It was announced a week ago that Hon. Fred E. Richards, president of the Union Mutual Life Insurance Co., of Maine, had retired from the presidency of the Portland National Bank and the Union Safe Deposit and Trust Company. Mr. Richards thus explains: "When I became president of the Union Mutual Life Insurance Co., November 1, 1893, I had been president of the Portland National Bank since its organization in 1889. Afterwards the former company bought out the Union Trust Co. and operated it. The Insurance Department of one of the States in which the insurance company is doing business criticized its ownership of the bank and the trust company, and recommended that it should dispose of the stock in those companies. This recommendation has been promptly carried out. The Union Mutual has sold its entire holding in the bank and a majority of its stock in the trust company, and the president of the Union Mutual has resigned from the presidency of the other two institutions." Both the bank and the trust company are, we understand, successful concerns, whose stock is at a high premium.
