The Average Congressman.

BY HON. JAMES H. FLETCHER

IN describing the average American congressman, I desire to say that there are many men in the House of Representatives who are ornaments to the Republic—men who are brilliant honest, patriotic and able. But they are far from being as numerous as they should be. As Thomas Carlyle would say: "the oration is not governed by the able man but by the man able to be appointed." If the sun has nothing to do but shine on our great, good congressmen, it would not be necessary for it to rise as early as it does.
