proved himself a lighter. He pitched into Mr. McKenzle for swallowing his principles. Six months before the announcement of reciprocity, that member had stood for higher protection on coal. When reciprocity was announced he told the miners to "work hard and put your trust in God." His own method, said Mr. Foster, was different. He secured the appointment of 119 fish wardens in his constituency and put his trust in them.

Dr. Clarke (Red Deer), the uncompromising western apostic of free traderegaled the house with a witty dissertation on the composition of the Borden cabinet, and the reasons for the result of the late elections. He p.c. tured Mr. Borden as regaling himself in the Quebec campaign with the wines of Old France, while in Ontario he flavored his liquor with more than a touch of Orange bitters.

He saw something of the explanation of the Lord Bishop of London that Canadians voted against reciprocity because they preferred to be poor and Canadian, rather than rich and American. And those people in Britain, he went on, who took their views from the bench of bishops, had gone away with the idea that Canada had been delivered from the bloated plutocratte domination of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fleiding and handed over to the care of a poor but patriotim cabinet.

Who's to Blame?

"Who taught the doctrine of east versus west?" he asked. "Not the western men."

"You did," came from the government benches."

The former minister of posts and communications, with him the minister of works (Monk) and Mr. Bourassa.

The Doctor inconsistent.

Hon. F. D. Monk neatly turned the tables on Dr. Clarke by referring to him as a hidebound free trader, who seemed to take a singular satisfaction in the fact that for 15 years he had supported a protectionist government.

What was the purport of the ammendment to the address? he asked. It was a representation to the cabinet ting the premier to proceed with his attempts to bolster up the administrational limitation, without interference. The former times the complexion of the cabinet was in the control of the house of

Well Designed Dining-room Furniture at Reasonable Cost

In dining-room furniture there has been a growing demand of late for designs some-what more decorative than the severely plain Mission and Craftsman styles which have been popular for so many years, and a glance over the splendid collection of dining-room suites displayed on our second floor will show how well this demand has been met in furniture suitable for small rooms as well as for those of larger proportions.
