

EVEN in Fall a fur garment is a comfort—almost a necessity. Then there's style to be considered also. Our garments are exclusive in style.

We have in the neighborhood of one hundred thousand dollars' worth of small fur garments—Caperines, Stoles, Collarettes, Scarfs, etc. They are in a wide range of designs and every pretty combination of fur. You can't afford to overlook them if you're buying. To do so is a wilful wasting of good money and an exhibition of bad judgment on your part.

were large. Bulls were discouraged and good freest, there was little in the news to encourage buying and sentiment became more bullish. The cattle supply increased 2,500 head. While the present run of receipts continues prices may continue to rise. Speculation is very active. The larger shorts are holding off for lower prices. Advances are not likely to go far or to hold very long, until some new factor is apparent which will encourage bull speculation. At the same time we do not believe the situation warrants much lower prices. We have a large consuming demand to fill before another crop comes around.

Corn—A very heavy market in Liverpool, perfect weather all over the corn belt, both countries, but would sell in the market here with a rather sharp decline in price at the opening. We look for lower prices, with occasional reactions. The near crop is selling at 50 cents in Missouri and also in Indiana at current prices. The present prices for hogs and cattle are still too low to warrant higher prices for corn. The government report, to-morrow, will make the situation more definite. Every estimate of output of present crop. It will probably have but little effect on prices.

Dry—A heavy tone and increased confidence here. Offerings were the feature in this market. The December condition of the weaker and we expect to see it sell at still greater discounts under a May, to-morrow's estimated receipts of 330 cases also make it probable that the market will overtake the estimate. With continued good weather we see no reason to expect higher prices, but would sell in the market here with a rather sharp decline in price at the opening. We look for lower prices, with occasional reactions. The near crop is selling at 50 cents in Missouri and also in Indiana at current prices. The present prices for hogs and cattle are still too low to warrant higher prices for corn. The government report, to-morrow, will make the situation more definite. London, Nov. 9.—Montagu William Lowry-Corry, first Baron Rowton, is dead. He was born in 1838.

Lord Rowton, better known as Montagu Corry, was born on Oct. 8, 1838, and was the second son of the marriage between the Right Hon. Henry Thomas Lowry-Corry, M.P., and the second daughter of the Earl of Beaumont, and Harriet, daughter of the sixth Earl of Shaftesbury. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated as B.A., and became a barrister of Lincoln's Inn in 1863.

In 1866 he became private secretary to the Right Hon. Benjamin Disraeli on accession to the office of premier. He held that office till the defeat of the Conservative government over the Irish church question in 1868, when he was elected to the House of Commons at the general election of 1874. Mr. Disraeli returned to office, and Mr. Corry resumed his post of private secretary to the chief and the relationship between them was of an exceptionally intimate and affectionate character. Mr. Corry acted as secretary to the British Mission to the Court of St. James in 1875, and Lord Beaconsfield and the late Marquis of Salisbury were the principal members of the mission. Mr. Corry was also accompanying the party as private secretary to his uncle, Lord Salisbury, when he was appointed ambassador to the Court of St. James in 1880, under the title of Baron Rowton, and became, on the Earl of Beaconsfield's death, his private secretary. Expectation ran high for the first few years over the biography of the great statesman, which it was understood had been left to Lord Rowton to accomplish, but these were destined to disappointment, for he is known to have been very busy with his public affairs, and devoted his part largely to social reform and philanthropic endeavor among the London poor. He was the founder of what are known as the "Rowton Houses," vast numbers of which are scattered all over London, which provide cheap and comfortable accommodation for some of the poorest of the city. He was also a more or less successful investor in the many curious ways a city like London can invest its money. He died on Nov. 9, 1897, at the age of 59, and was buried in St. Paul's churchyard. He was married to the Hon. Mrs. Rowton, and they had three children, a son and two daughters. He was a member of the House of Commons from 1874 to 1897, and was a member of the Privy Council from 1891 to 1897. He was also a member of the House of Lords from 1897 to 1903.

WITH a hundred thousand men within reach of the store we're doing big business in Hats. They come here for the newest and best styles. Ours are different from the common sort. We haven't a wool or a part wool hat in the place—every one is made of fur. Wool gets rough, and loses its color, and cracks. Fur stays smooth, holds its color and won't crack. Little things perhaps, but they're the basis here of a big business.

DRINK BLOOD OF OTHERS AS OTHERS DRINK WINE

St. Petersburg, Nov. 9.—The latest Sachalin mail addressed to the Minister of the Interior contains the following extraordinary story: To Convict 1118, name Kaserski, whose home was Moscow, and who was banished to the Village of Chander, eighteen murders later committed in the island have been traced, and proofs are accumulating that he is guilty of many more. He admits his inability to state just how many men he killed. The official thought this a lie, and ordered the convict to drink from one of the bottles to show that they did not contain poison or explosives. The convict complied with seeming pleasure, and the search continued. Something that looked like a human foot was found in the pig sty, and suspicious being aroused, the Governor ordered the garden dug up, with the result that eighteen human skulls were discovered buried there.

The convict then confessed that he was responsible for the numerous disappearances, and maybe for the death of many more persons—he could not remember how many he had killed during his drinking human blood. He said he could not exist without a bottle stored away in his lodger.

The same time the convict was proud to show that he was not a murderer for gain. He had other secrets to reveal to his relatives (which was proven true), or kept at the bottom of the well, from where it was recovered by the authorities.

He confessed, that he had made good use of his bodies, by cutting them up and feeding his pigs on them. The investigation is still continued. As in Russia the death penalty is imposed only on political criminals, this notorious monster will be suffered to live, and the Czar's order against corruption, the medical society two months ago, will likewise favor him. In further reports the medical authorities of the penal colony said that Convict 1118 is perfectly rational.

Mrs. Rich admitted that she had starved the child when presented with the imprint of nails on the infant's throat. Mother Burned to Death.

Binghamton, N.Y., Nov. 9.—News has just reached Binghamton that Mrs. Catherine Wandel, 74 years old, was burned to death yesterday at her home in Brookville, a small Pennsylvania hamlet several miles from this city. She lived with her son, James Wandel, who works in the iron works, and on returning found the room full of smoke, and could dimly distinguish a figure in one corner. He quonched the flames, when he discovered that it was his mother's clothing and body that was burning. She was sitting on a couch, with her back against a chair. When Mr. Wandel left the house a letter of greeting from the floor opened. It is supposed that the great fire was caused by a candle which had been left burning in a room. The fire was extinguished by the fire department.
