traffic embodied in the bill, the electors, the municipalities, the commissioners and the bill itself. Was not that a restrictive measure? He was sorry Mr. Marter had not been fit to favor the bill. He was certain that, should the Opposition attain power, and bring in a temperance bill, it would meet with his support, if he were in Opposition. What was wanted was an act that could be well enforced, not a measure like the Scott Act. The territory gradually taken possession of by the Government, he maintained had invariably been held, and they were generally enabled in a couple of years after gaining a step to advance still further. The Minister then defended the various clauses of the bill. It would prevent, he argued, the younger half of the people, which was the most tempted half, from obtaining inquor. The matter of the non-liceusing of clubs was an embarrassing one. It involved to an extent the leptivation of private social rights of responsible men.
