The Hay—Pancefote Treaty and Panama Canal; An English City Owned by Two Men

Treaties duly made and ratified by the President and Senate of the United States are, according to the constitution, declared to be "the supreme law of the land." If the treaty in question runs counter to existing legislation of either country, then that legislation must be modified to conform with the treaty.

In 1816, after the commercial treaty with England was raised the question as to whether it was necessary to have a bill modifying American revenue laws, so as to conform to the treaty stipulations, or whether the treaty, as "the supreme law of the land," itself operated "retroactively." The point was solved by the passage of a declaration act (U. S. Statutes at Large, Vol. II, C. 334), emphasizing the fact that the terms of the treaty superseded the pre-existing revenue laws.

It is necessary to recall this in connection with the Hay-Pancefote treaty, now to be the force of account of the impending legislation at Washington with regard to the Panama Canal, and to bear in mind that the treaty in question must absolutely govern all projected legislation, and at the same time must be regarded as superseding all former American shipping laws, in any point where these may be in conflict with the treaty stipulations.

I refer to this matter because the action of Great Britain in taking exception to certain points of canal legislation now under consideration, as violations of the Hay-Pancefote treaty, is just at present the absorbing topic of the hour. It is a matter which in certain eventualities is calculated to affect unpleasantly the relations of the United States with all maritime powers, whose interests are identical with those of England.

Every foreign nation appreciates the fact that the great water-way will owe its existence to American enterprise and American money, and that therefore the United States has a right to demand any toll it pleases from ships using it in order to obtain some return for the vast outlay involved in its construction. But what all powers demand is that there shall be no discrimination. Denunciation of the Hay-Pancefote treaty should precede any legislation in violation thereof.

Emperor Nicholas has turned a deaf ear to the request of Emperor William that Count Benckendorff should be appointed to succeed the late Count Ostensacken as Muscovite ambassador at Berlin. The refusal is based on the same misapprehension of Benckendorff to leave England, where he has represented his government for more than ten years, and where he is thoroughly at home, popular alike with the reigning house and in society.

Instead, Emperor Nicholas has promoted Sergius Sverbeff to be ambassador at Berlin. Sverbeff, though more or less unknown to the British public, is a very able diplomat, and spent many years as first secretary and counselor of the Russian embassy at Vienna, being charged with the task of negotiating the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina by Austria, which country to the surprise of war with Russia. It was in fact largely owing to his tact, ability and conciliatory attitude that hostilities were averted, and the bitterness between the two governments finally smoothed over.

Previous to his post at Vienna, he was connected with the Czar's legations at Constantinople and at Munich. He belongs to an old patrician family, by considerable private means, was a general favorite at Athens as well as at Vienna, and is a close personal friend of M. Sazonov, the Russian minister of foreign affairs. Very level-headed, and extremely active, he is likely to do well for his country at Berlin, where his predecessor, who was a very old man, was for many years a prey to the infirmities of his age, and kept on only at the pressing request of the Kaiser.

"Somerset Stone," consisting of a tall cross of Aberdeen granite and a ponderous slab of the same material. He intended it for his tombstone, and on it are carved his name, title, and armorial bearings, followed by these extraordinary lines:

"The tomb was the Sheridan Duke. He defrauded and nearly ruined the St. Maur family. This stone was prepared by the thirteenth duke in his lifetime, and was erected here in pursuance of his express directions.

The rectory of Berry-Pomeroy church, in whose graveyard most of the St. Maur family are buried, refused to allot a location for the monument, although the thirteenth duke had left a fund for its maintenance in perpetuo, and accordingly the executors of the will caused its erection in a corner of a field belonging to the entitled estates, near Tolness, in Devonshire, where it is the object of numerous pilgrimages on the part of the curious.

This impoverishment of the dukedom was owing to the Sheridan Duke's dislike of his brothers, who became his heirs through the death of his two sons, the Earl of St. Maur, and Lord Edward St. Maur. The latter mysteriously disappeared during a shooting expedition in the Himalayas in 1802.

Daily Hints For the Cook

STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE.
Mix and sift two cupfuls of pastry flour, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, and one half teaspoonful of salt. Work in one fourth cupful of butter, using the tips of the fingers; then add three fourths cupful of milk. Toss on a slightly floured board and divide into halves. Put and roll each half separately, to fit a Washington pie or round layer cake tin. Put in a hot oven from 12 to 15 minutes. Pick over, wash, drain, and hull strawberries. Cut in quarters, put into an earthen dish, and sprinkle with sugar to taste; about one cupful is usually required for each box of strawberries, and one box of berries is required for each shortcake. Place on back of range until warmed, then crush slightly. Split shortcake, and spread out surface with butter. Put the berries between and on top of the layers, spreading each time on a hot surface. Cover with whipped cream, sweetened and flavored with vanilla, and garnish with whole selected berries.

An Obsolete Word

By RUTH CAMERON

A COLLEGE president who was lecturing on the type of girl who succeeds, and the type of girl who fails, declared that one of the most common members of that latter class is the girl who always tries to blame anything untoward that happens to her, upon someone else. This kind of girl, he said, if she was passing through a gate and there was nobody else in sight, and she should tear her gown, would still think that the accident was somebody's fault.

We all know people like that—people who regard every unfortunate happening in the home or outside of it as somebody's fault, and are perfectly frantic if they cannot find someone to blame for anything that disturbs or inconveniences them.

When anything disagreeable occurs, these folks must immediately let off steam by blaming someone, and when, as sometimes happens, the disagreeable occurrence cannot really be traced to anyone, these people become absolutely explosive with pent-up blame.

For instance, in an office in which I once worked, the head man was of this type. One summer day when all the windows were open as a matter of course, the whole office happened to be out of the room. One girl was at dinner, by her permission; another had gone downtown with him to take down an important interview; and the office boy had been sent on an errand. During this period a quick summer shower came up and some important papers were injured by the rain. It was really impossible for that man to blame anyone for this unfortunate happening, and we almost feared that his pent-up irritation would do him physical injury.

In as too many households, where some of the family has this desire to blame someone for everything that troubles them, the patient mother is the scapegoat of every accident and every irritation.

"Why wasn't the telephone answered today?" demands the son of the family. "I tried six times to get the house and they told me you didn't answer. It's too bad, mother. I don't see any use in our having a telephone if you can't answer it!" Whereupon the patient Mrs. Griselda attempts to palliate her son's irritation by explaining that it was the maid's afternoon out, that her daughter was making candy in the kitchen, and that she herself had gone out on an errand for father.

"Why can't we ever have dinner ready on time?" raves father. "The meat didn't come until late? Why didn't you tell him what time you wanted it? You did? I don't believe you made it very plain. You're always telling about some thing or other being late. I should think you could manage to have things delivered when we want them. I pay enough for them."

A great many things happen in this world that are nobody's fault—some things just plain happen, and others are unfortunate accidents or mistakes. It is a relief to have someone to blame when any of those things irritates one, but a relief of which only selfish and unjust people avail themselves, and in the truly generous person's dictionary, "fault" is an entirely obsolete word; the words "mistake" or "accident" have quite taken its place.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHAS

The annual decoration day of the Knights of Pythias will be held on August 20. Tomorrow night the ceremonies in New Brunswick Lodge No. 1 will be of an especially interesting character. No less than fourteen equires will be elevated to the rank of knight, the final and most elaborate of the Pythian degrees. This is a large class of candidates and it is expected the fraternity throughout the city will attend in large numbers. The lodge will be called to order a half hour earlier than usual so that the ceremonies and refreshments will be over at a convenient time. Grand Chancellor Ritchie of Halifax, head of the maritime province domain, will visit the St. John lodges on July 24. H. L. Garter of this city is one of the representatives to the supreme lodge and will leave in a few days to attend the annual session in Fort Worth, Texas. The grand lodge of the province will meet in Moncton on August 20 and 21.

TWO FATALITIES IN PROVINCE

A freight train driven by Wm. Weeks, aged thirty-five years, ran into a sand slide about four miles above Grand Falls yesterday morning and he was killed. The engine, tender and two cars left the rails. He was a native of Woodstock, and one of the youngest engineers on the road. He was at McDermid for quite a while and also worked at Brownville, Me., before going to Woodstock to work.

Edward McShane, a farmer living at Cedar Camp, some miles from Sussex, was killed yesterday by being kicked in the stomach by a horse which he was showing to some friends. Doctor McAlister performed an operation but the unfortunate man died. He was forty-five years old and survived by his wife and a large family.

The man who is always harping about every man having his price is usually willing to sell out cheap.
