V'r. Malvern arrived at the manor house Ash of an hour after Sir Thomas breathed rectory to many of the action of the second of the se Description of affairs. The revulsion the true position of affairs. The revulsion of affairs. The revulsion of affairs. The revulsion of affairs of the true position of affairs. The revulsion of affairs of the true position of affairs of the true position of affairs. The revulsion of feeling which ensued entirely unmanned him; and it was not till an hour afterwards that he recovered his self-possession sufficiently to converse reasonably and coolly upon his position. At last he became apparently reconciled to the sudden overclouding of his imaginatively-brilliant prospects, and it was agreed that as he was a relative of the widow, he should at once set off to break the sad news to her. Well, a fw days after his departure, broceived a letter from him stating that Lady Redwood—1 and it was agreed that as he was a relative of the widow, he should at once set off to break the said news to her. Well, a few days after his departure, breezived a letter from him stating that Lady Redwood—I don't think, by the way, that, as her husband died before succeeding to the baronetey, whe is entitled to that appellation of honor; we, however call her so out of courtesy—that Lady Redwood, though prematurely confined ip consequence of the intelligence of her hisband's untimely death, had given birth to a female child, and that both mother and daughter were as well as could be expected. This, you wall agree, seemed perfectly satisfactory?"

"Entirely sot."

"So I though. Mr. Malvern was now."

VIALLE & CARLETON, Silver and Electro-Plating, the Machallating the finally successful. Mr and Mrs Williams I discovered living in a pretty hopse, with nest grounds attached, about two miles out of Birmingham, on the coach road to Vorethamption. Their assumed name was Burridge, and I ascertained from the servent girl, who fetched their dinner and supports of Base. Williams a neighboring tavern, that they had one child, a boy, a few months old, of whom neither father nor month seemed very fond. By dint of much perseverance, I at length got. dint of much perseverance, I at length of pretty familiar terms with Mr. Burnings regularly in a tavern; but with all the pains-taking, indefatigable ringenuity I comployed, the chief knowledge I acquired, during three weeks of assiduous endeavor, was, that my friend Burnidge intended, immediately after a visit which he expected shortly from a rich and influential relative in London, to emigrate to America, at all events to go abroad. This was however, very significant and precious information, and he was rarely afterwards, out of my sight.

(Conclusion next week.)

"Entirely so."

"So I though. Mr. Malvern was now unquestionably, whether Sir Charles Malvern was now the proprietor of the Redwood estates, burthened as with a charge, in ac diagnostic states and the states of t
