because the United States imposed certain duties upon our grains, we should meet them with a counter duty, or, as the hon. member for Cumberland said, we should adopt the sincerest form of flattery by following their example. (Hear.) That the Government did so we know. Except under urgent circumstances or for particular reasons, no grain coming into this country paid duty on account of the tariff. This measure of course had not the effect of increasing prices; for we know that the price of wheat was relatively higher in Chicago and other western cities under the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite since the introduction of the tariff, than the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite since the introduction of the tariff, than before we had any duty upon foreign wheat. But while they were willing to make pretences to farmers of assisting them and meeting their views, hon. gentlemen opposite decided that it was necessary to impose a duty on some articles that might put money into their pockets. They have imposed the heaviest duties upon the poorest articles of woollen cloth, that made the poor man pay ten times as much as the rich man, inasmuch as the specific duty upon the finest cloths was the same as upon the poorest. They endeavoured in that way to give protection table woollen goods brought into the country since then, shows how effectually that protection has been used. But now, driven by the complaints of hundreds of thousands of the honest yeomanry, who feel that they have been sold and imposed upon by specious promises—(cheers)—hon. gentlemen opposite head and imposed upon by specious promises—(cheers)—hon. gentlemen opposite head and imposed upon by specious promises—(cheers)—hon. gentlemen opposite head and they have been sold and imposed upon by specious promises—(cheers)—hon. gentlemen opposite head and they have been sold and imposed upon by specious promises—(cheers)—hon. gentlemen opposite head and they have been sold and they have imposed a duty.

"I see by this morning's Globe that Sir Leonard, in his Budget Speech, proposes to put a duty on wool of 3c. per pound on combing wools of Leicester, Costwold, and Lincolnshire sheep. Mr. Tilley will not get one dollar of revenue from this source, as we do not import one pound of this class of combing wool into this country, and we are not likely to do so, as we have no machinery to manufacture the class of goods combing wools of Leicester, Costwold, and Lincolnshire sheep. Mr. Tilley will not get one dollar of revenue from this source, as we do not import one pound of this class of combing wool into this country, and we are not likely to do so, as we have no machinery to manufacture the class of goods this type of wool is most suitable for, and we can buy wools from other countries at a great deal less, and more suited to our trade. This is a transparent fraud on farmers, and will be of no benefit to them or injury to our woolen manufacturers. The price of this class of wool is determined in England, which is our only competitor, for she produces over 100,000,000 lbs., and we produce about 8,000,000 lbs. I have been in this business for twenty years, and have only been able to ship this type of wool to England three times. I can hardly believe that the hon. Finance Minister does not know there is not a pound of these wools imported into Canada. (Cheers and laughter.) In order that there may be no mistake about i., I will read extracts from some letters I have required. One gentleman, who is probably the largest dealer in wool in the Dominion, says:—

While speaking on the tariff I omitted to mention one point, and though it is somewhat out of my line of argument, with the permission of the House I will deal with it now.

THE FARMER AND THE N. P.
One of the pretences of ponic entlemen opposite in advocating the National Policy, was that it would benefit the farmer. It was alleged that because the United States imposed certain duties upon our grains, we should meet them with a counter duty, or, as the hon. member for Cumberland said, accounts, and show as transputable.
