live long in memory of the people who patronized the theatre on the night of the "show." It was neither a drama or melodrama, it was a farce, and next to the wonderful James Boys, who held up the country, it was the biggest and boldest robbery effected in this country for a long time.

The town patronized the theatre well, and before the curtain rolled up, every seat was full. But are the last breath he left the body of Uncle Tom, many, left, fearing that they might be asked to remain for the wake. And "Woe betide when Eva" of all death scenes ever witnessed, this was the most agonizing.

Eliza's dash across the Wabash, made Hawker's attempt to fly the Atlantic, and it would be advisable for travellers to take a lesson in the play of the entire show would have been expensive, had they charged the usual admission for a barn show, three pence and a piece of gun. Grand Falls, is a good theatre going town, but it will not stand for shows of this nature, and it would be advisable for travelling companies to present a play of some standing, rather than to try and run a wizard.
