grown to enormous proportions. To meet this demand, hot house establishments by the hundred have in late years sprung up in the vicinity of the large towns, and in these millions of blooms are in the aggregate raised annually for the trade. As an illustration of what many of these places are like, we may state the instance of one Long Island rose-grower, who has 16,000 plants now covered with buds and blossoms, the product of which he sends to the New York flower market. His hot-houses, crammed with luxuriant plants, present a grand sight to the eye now, in the heart of winter. FARM AND LIVE STOCK NOTES. Lime helps a damp sour soil.

In a few days those who attended the gathering were greatly alarmed to learn that their friend was dangerously ill with small-pox. It was not long before a number of the guests were stricken down with the disease, which continued to spread until now it has assumed alarming proportions.

While discharging the duties of Master of Novices at Woodchester, in 1853, a duty was imposed upon the young priest which, to one less fifted or less courageous, might not have been successful. The walls of the nearest town were covered with placards announcing that "the unhallowed practices of monks and nuns, and the idolatry of the Popish Church, would be detailed by one who had left that implous superstition for the saving truths of Protestantism!" The young students of Woodchester were shocked at the impiety of this placard, for they hoped their quiet seclusion of Woodchester would not be thus offensively invaded. As the "convert" gave an Italian name, Alessandro Messina, and Father Tom Burke was the last arrival from Italy, the prior resolved he should attend the lecture, and, if he found an opportunity, confute the revier. viler found an opportunity, confute the reviler.

Aware of the intense bigotry of the rural population, and their readiness to swallow any absurd story regarding those wicked monks and nuns, Father Tom owned he did not relish the task; but the Prior put it as a duty, so he was bound, by his vow of obedience, to submit and go.

On reaching the lecture hall, he found the attractive placard had collected a vast audience, composed not only of the rural clodhoppers, but shopkeepers and tradesmen. When the smoky-visaged Italian mounted the platform, he was greated with loud applause. Father Burke was greatly relieved when the "convert" commenced his harangue. The coarseness of his language, the absurdity of his assertions, the utter disregard of history, the ignorance of places he claimed to be acquainted with, made his refutation an easy task, provided only Father Burke could sente a hearing. This he realest

Over 100 cases have been reported up to the present time, and there appears to be little chauce of checking it.

The French-Canadians are very adverse to vaccination, and as a result the disease goes very hard with them. The disease has now spread to Erinsville, Maribank, Clare River and other settlements in the surrounding country.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the town, to whom Father Tom had recently given a large order for painting the monastery, and to him, as an Catholic priests, three of the latter having been stricken down while administering to the wants of the helpless sufferers. On Dec 10, a telegram was sent to the conered words of remonstrance against the unfairness of listening to an attack, yet denying to hear the reply, the audience consented to hear Father Tom. In a brilliant address the young Dominican showed the utter ignorance, the pure invention, the untruthfulness of every statement of the "convert." Father Tom had himself studied in the very college where some of these imaginary acts were said to have occurred, and he proved, from the man's own statements he (the convert) had never been there. Nav, more, on that platform, from his intimate acquaintance with Italy, Father Tom forced this wretch to admit he only related the stories from hearsay; and the plaudits that the thirt that the stories from hearsay; and the plaudits that the stories from hearsay; and the plaudits with thirt the supplication. the stories from hearsay; and the plaudits with which the convert's abominable statements were received were turned into shouts of derisive laughter as the sledge-hammer blows liberally dealt by the young Dominican fell fast and heavy on the now unmasked impostor, while on the now unmasked impostor, while the cheers and shouts for Father Tom rent the air. Alessandro Messina was glad to sneak away without receiving the ducking in the horsepond persons seemed willing to afford him.

In thirty years' successful experience in the manufacture of 150,000 instruments, the Mason & Hamiin Company have accumulated facilities for manufacture without which they could neither produce as good organs as they now make, nor with as great economy.
