

H. A. MCKEOWN IS APPOINTED AGAIN CHOSEN

Sworn In as Attorney-General Yesterday. Opposition Named City Men Last Night. Premier Robinson Denies Opposition (Statements That Office Was Hawked About the Country)

MONCTON, Oct. 28.—Hon. Harrison A. McKeown was sworn in as attorney general of the province yesterday afternoon. The ceremony was administered in Moncton in the presence of his honor Lieutenant Governor Tweedie. Premier Robinson was present as well as a number of other members of the executive council. Very few people knew that Mr. McKeown would be formally taken into the cabinet. He returned to St. John last night. Speaking of the appointment to the Sun last night Premier Robinson said: "There seems to be a feverish desire on the part of the local opposition to have some person sworn in as attorney general, and both the opposition members and their press are well supplementing their lamentable weak attacks by reckless statements that this important office has been hawked about the country from lawyer to lawyer. I do not desire to ensure our opposition friends too strongly for their oft-repeated misstatements in this regard, as I confess, I do not desire to stand upon it. I might have been compelled to resort to similar tactics. I can only deny the offer to the honorable Mr. McKeown. I was influenced by the fact that Mr. McKeown's experience and standing at the bar, his well known ability as a skillful debater, both in and out of the house coupled with his residence in the city of St. John, where he is easily accessible to all those having business with the chief crown officer of the province, made him pre-eminently fitted for the position. While there are a number of lawyers in the province with sufficient ability to fill the office, creditably well served as we are, I am sure that even our opposition friends will admit that it was difficult to have Mr. McKeown appointed to the office during his absence in England."

FALL SUPPLY OF COAL EXCEEDINGLY SHORT

Outlook in Amherst is Far from Pleasing. AMHERST, Oct. 28.—Horace Dickley, son of the late Hon. A. R. Dickie, who formerly represented Cumberland, left for Halifax for the purpose of being admitted as a partner to the left firm of which Sir Hibbert Tupper is the head. Mr. Dickie has been residing in Halifax for the past number of years. He is a young man of great promise, inheriting much of his father's splendid ability.

Although Amherst is within a few miles of half a dozen coal mines, active operation yet the fall supply is exceedingly short. Last Thursday it was feared that one or more of our local industries would be compelled to close down owing to the scarcity of this essential fuel. The arrival of a few cars averted the danger temporarily. Householders find it impossible to get the delivery of a sufficient supply, but must rest content with what the dealer sends them. The scarcity is largely due to the Springfield strike.

In Springfield conditions are far worse than in Amherst. Wood choppers have been sent to work on a special train as fuel and if the strike continues much longer considerable suffering must ensue. The marriage took place at Wentworth Wednesday morning at the residence of Miss Celia Purdy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hibbert Purdy of that place and Dr. William Lawson of Advocate Harbor. The wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Smith of Lectioner, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Swallow. The young couple left on the C. P. R. immediately after the ceremony on a trip to Boston and New York.

Amherst is to have a technical school conducted under the auspices of the local government, aided by contributions from the local industries and the town. It will open on November 6th under the supervision of Prof. Sexton of Dalhousie College. The subjects to be taken up will embrace English, mathematics, architectural drawing, elementary electricity, machine drawing, arithmetic, etc.

For the coming winter the public school buildings will be used and if the experiment is a success a new building specially adapted for the work will be built. A large number of the young men have already signified their intention of joining the classes.

George F. Miles, the well known I. C. R. official of Campbellton, is at present an inmate of Highland View Hospital. Mr. Miles will be operated upon for appendicitis in a few days. Mr. and Mrs. William Casey arrived in Amherst this week from New York. Mr. Casey is the son of C. R. Casey of Amherst and is an electrical engineer by profession. He was in San Francisco at the time of the earthquake disaster and shortly after went to the Klondike where he received severe injuries. His sight being threatened, he went to New York to consult a specialist and will spend some months in his old home here.

ANOTHER "COXEY'S ARMY" GETTING READY

"GENERAL" JACOB S. COXE. He is now preparing for a big crusade to advertise his bond scheme, which, he says, will save many public problems.

for which a number of prizes have been offered by prominent merchants. This contest is open to the public. There is also to be a turkey supper in the Baptist Church, which will probably be patronized by many people.

BUDGET OF NEWS FROM CAMPBELLTON

Inquiry Into the Claims of Riparian Owners Against the Restigouche Boom Company

CAMPBELLTON, N. B., Oct. 28.—Premier Robinson was in town on Monday to inquire into claims of riparian owners against the Restigouche Boom Company. A meeting was held on Monday evening in the office of W. A. True-man and A. E. G. McKennis. It was held by the riparian owners of the Head that the boom company had destroyed their fishing stands and thus deprived them of their shore rights. The riparian owners at Flatlands claimed that the boom which passes through their waters interferes with and destroys their fishing. After hearing testimony, the meeting was adjourned until Tuesday. On the resumption Tuesday morning, Mr. Robinson stated that he was prepared to go on with the hearing if the claimants so wished. Mr. A. Mott, who represented the Boom Company, threatened to withdraw from the case because his clients had not had sufficient time to prepare their case. It was then mutually agreed to adjourn until December 10th, and it was ordered that the Boom Company be furnished, within two weeks, with a full statement of the claims. In the afternoon Premier Robinson drove to Tide Head and viewed the scene of the Boom Company's operations.

George Mills was taken ill about ten days ago and removed to the Amherst Hospital. It was found that he was too weak to undergo an operation for appendicitis. After he has recovered his strength the operation will be performed. At a meeting of the school board, held in the secretary's office on Monday, Jas. Carr, B.A., was appointed to fill the vacancy in the Grammar school occasioned by the resignation of Miss Hazel McCann. Mr. Carr is a graduate of Dalhousie University, holds a grammar school license and has had some experience in teaching.

Prof. T. F. Williamson was also engaged to teach the pupils of the various grades vocal music for one hour each day. An interesting event took place on Tuesday of this week at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Chedore, when their daughter, Miss Gertrude, was married to Chas. A. Wagner. The bride presented a very charming appearance in a gown of cream silk with a veil decorated with orange blossoms. Miss Gertrude Mann, who acted as bridesmaid, was attired in a gown of dark blue, trimmed with white silk. After the ceremony supper was served. On Wednesday evening at the Presbyterian manse, Rev. D. Carr united in marriage Miss Doris M. F. Lodge of Runnymede and Perle E. Chaytor of this town. After the ceremony a very dainty luncheon was served at the residence of the bride's uncle, Robert L. Duncan. The bride received many beautiful and costly presents. The happy couple left on the Maritime express for St. John and other points of interest.

Dr. Lunan of Campbellton, and Dr. Bell of Montreal, who have been after big game in the Kedworth country, returned to town on Tuesday. They were successful in getting one large moose. W. L. McRae, who for the past year has been president of the Citizens' Band, has resigned his position. Mr. McRae has been untiring in his efforts to build up the band and his resignation was very regretfully accepted. Allan Miller has been in Toronto undergoing an operation to his ear for deafness. It is believed that the operation was a complete success and strong hopes are held out for his complete recovery. Dr. Pinesau performed the operation of grafting skin on the young girl who was badly burned at Salmon Lake a few weeks ago. The skin was applied by one of the inmates of the hospital. Among the attractions for Thanksgiving day are a shoot on the range,

SLIGHT FIRE AT AMHERST

AMHERST, N. S., Oct. 28.—A fire occurred tonight in the Cumberland House, Church street. Mr. Benner is the proprietor. The alarm was rung in and the department promptly responded. When they arrived at the scene flames were bursting out the windows of the third story. The situation looked bad. The flames were soon extinguished, however. The room was badly gutted, the furniture saved being damaged. A lamp exploded and the curtains caught fire. The building was owned by E. E. Hewson.

DRANK CARBOLIC ACID

TORONTO, Oct. 28.—John Healey died in St. Michael's Hospital today as the result of having drunk carbolic acid. He was brought to the hospital by the county authorities for alleged assault on a little girl and a warrant had been issued for his arrest. It is probable that worrying over this led the unhappy man to take his life. He was seventy years old.

ST. JOHN MAN MURDERED HIS RELATIVES BELIEVE

Suspicious Circumstances Provoke Them to Legal Action

Body of Mate McLeod Reported Drowned in Philadelphia Months Ago Has Been Exhumed.

(Tuesday's Sun.) That murder and not accident was the cause of her son's death is the belief of Mrs. Sarah McLeod of 643 Main street. It will be remembered that McLeod, who was made on one Capt. Eskin's vessel, was supposed to have been drowned while the vessel was lying at anchor off Philadelphia some time ago. At the request of his relatives the body was sent to St. John and taken through to St. Martin's for burial. The deceased was supposed to have met his death by falling overboard at night, and the verdict of accidental drowning has so far not been openly questioned. In the meantime, however, his mother and other relatives have been gathering evidence which they believe points to the fact that McLeod was murdered and his body thrown overboard. The family were first led to make a more thorough investigation of the facts on account of the condition in which the body was found when received for burial. When it reached St. John the fore the affidavit of a Philadelphia undertaker to the effect that the body had been properly embalmed and enclosed in a lead box, and a bill for $88, which included an item of $15 for preparing the body for burial, was paid by relatives here. Notwithstanding the affidavit that the body was embalmed a letter addressed to the St. John undertaker was attached to the coffin instructing him not to open the coffin on account of the decomposed condition of the body. Before the interment took place at St. Martin's, the bereaved relatives could not resist their natural desire to have a last look at the late member of their family. Their horror can be imagined when the coffin which was found to consist only of a rough wooden box lined with paper was opened and the body inside was found to be stark naked, with liberal traces of the mud in which it had been found still clinging to it. A few newspapers had been roughly wrapped about the body to sustain life. The body was in a condition which seemed to indicate that no effort had been made even to wash it, much less to embalm it, and that it had been in the water for some time. The interment was proceeded with and afterwards the inquiring relatives decided to bring action against the undertaker for damages. In order that the police should be kept advised of the facts of the case, Mrs. McLeod, mother of the deceased man, who had not been present at the burial, went to St. Martin's on a month ago and had the body exhumed. She might as she might be able to certify to the facts of the case. In the meantime the discovery of blood stains on some of the clothing of her son and on the floor of the room in which he resided, together with the manner of his death had induced Mrs. McLeod to pursue her investigations farther. For this reason Coroner Gilmore of St. Martin's inquired when the body was exhumed. He opened the man's lungs and instead of finding them full of water, as would have been expected in the case of a man who had drowned, he found only a very small amount of water. A wine glass of water was found. Some of the hair seemed to be torn away from the front of the scalp and, although decomposition was in an advanced stage, there seemed to be traces of bruises on the head. Mrs. McLeod wrote to the officials of the Board of Health at Philadelphia asking for a letter from the coroner, who would bear her to take action against the undertaker there. Shortly after making these inquiries, she received a letter from the coroner, who had received the remains, asking her to send her power of attorney to a lawyer, whom she named, saying that if she did so he would see that the police should be kept advised of the facts of the case. "Do lawyers work for nothing?" asked Mrs. McLeod. "Of course not, but I never thought it worth their while to prey this man?" This is a question, the answer to which she is seeking. The bloodstained articles found among the effects of the sailor formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor to learn more of the details of the alleged drowning. They first examined the berth formerly occupied by McLeod, in the search for more blood stains. On the mattress, which had apparently been washed and turned upside down, they found a trace of blood. Mrs. McLeod had just taken a bath and had washed the previous day to wash the stains from the coverlet. When the vessel on which McLeod had served as mate returned to St. John, Mrs. McLeod and her daughter, Mrs. Sweet, boarded her in the endeavor