THE JACK JOHNSON AGITATION IN LONDON

Negro Pugilist's Appearance on Music Hall Stage Postponed.

Jack Johnson, the negro pugilist, (who has appealed against a conviction for breaking the White Slave laws of the United States) did not appear on the stage on Monday at the South London and Euston Music halls at which he had been billed.

Public opinion had expressed itself so strongly against his being allowed to appear that the management decided on a postponement, and issued the following statement:—

"In accordance with our previous intentions to discuss with Johnson on his arrival the question of his appearing, we have to-day seen him and have explained the present position. He desires to deal thoroughly with the criticisms made, and with this object is arranging certain interviews and taking other measures to meet the allegations.

In the meantime, concurring in the view of the management that for the present his appearance as arranged would be inadvisable, he has requested the postponement of his engagement."

Johnson, however, with his satellites, was present in a box at the Euston, being loudly cheered by a section of the audience, and at the South London was encouraged by the plaudits of the crowd to make a short speech. It had been his intention on Monday morning to duly perform his "turn," but as the result of an interview in the morning with the syndicate which controls the two halls the above notice was posted.

Actresses Driven Off Stage

At the booking office in the Euston Music Hall a notice was exhibited stating that Grant & Grant would fill the vacancy on the programme. Several people had their money returned.

During the "first house" at the Euston evidence was speedily forthcoming that the boxer has no lack of admirers. Miss Madie Scott had refused to be in the programme with him.

but as the boxer was not to appear she agreed to do so. No soon had she stepped on the stage than she was greeted with a chorus of cat-calls and obscene cries from the pit and gallery.

She tried to begin a song, but the shouts increased in volume and vigor until at length she was compelled to retire. A similar reception awaited Miss Beth Taite, who had also objected to Johnson's appearance. During a lull in the storm of hooting and booing, she tried to address the rowdy gallery.

"I do not object to Johnson because of his color," she began, but the pit and gallery would not hear her, and she had to leave the stage.

Later Johnson came to the front of a private box, amid a clamor of cheers from pit and gallery and an outburst of hissing and booing from a party of young men in the stage box opposite. Johnson tried to speak but the young men in the box effectively shouted him down. The management interfered, but the occupants of the box insisted on their right to protest, and finally Johnson was compelled to abandon his plan to make a speech, and paid a visit to the South London, where he was warmly greeted by a section of the audience that the performance was interrupted for him to deliver a few observations.

Pleas for Fair Play

Then he returned to the Euston, and sat in his box again. Miss Scott and Miss Tate absented themselves from the stage during the second house. So vociferous was the crowd outside the hall when Johnson and his party were about to leave at the conclusion of the night's performance that the pugilist re-entered the building, and from an upper balcony briefly addressed the throng.

He thanked them for their reception, remarking that he was glad that English people were so fair-minded, and that they did not attempt to judge a man before they had seen him. He declared that the crime for which the Americans were condemning him was his defeat of Jeffries in 1910.

Interviewed on Monday, Mr. Pierre Cohen, manager of the Euston, said Johnson might appear next week, adding: "When Johnson appeared at the Euston Music Hall during the summer of 1911 he drew big crowds each evening. He is a very versatile man, he is a very good dancer and he can sing."

Johnson stated to a Pressman that his provincial bookings—Manchester, Leeds, Birmingham, Liverpool, and many of the big towns—were unaffected. He complained bitterly of the censures which had been heaped upon him, and said: "I want to go round to people and answer their criticisms. I should particularly like to meet the Rev. Mr. Meyer and others condemning me without a trial, and trying to keep me down."

He hopes to be able to obtain scenery in order to produce a sketch to be entitled "The Mann Act," which would tell the story of his troubles in America.

Jack Johnson left London on Wednesday for Paris with the intention it is said of obtaining a third motor car, the two cars which he brought with him on Sunday last having been seized by the sheriff of London.

This action is due to the fact that last February Mr. Frank Macnaghten, head of the Macnaghten-Vanderbilt circuit, obtained a judgment against Johnson for £1,500 and cost.

As payment had not been made, Mr. Macnaghten asked the sheriff to attach the goods, and the cars are now in the garage off Oxford street. Mrs. Johnson claims that the cars are her property, but Mr. Macnaghten declares that failing liquidation of the judgment, he will have the cars sold by auction.

SAMUEL SAYS NEED IS GREAT

His Plain Talk About Navy to People of Regina.

REGINA, Sask., Sept. 13.—Emphasizing the need for the maintenance of British sea power and the importance to the people of Saskatchewan of uninterrupted trade routes on the ocean, postmaster-General Herbert Samuel at the Canadian Club luncheon, declared that although they were far from the sea board, British naval supremacy was as essential to their peace and prosperity as to the people of any other part of the Empire. If the trade routes of the sea were interrupted for one year, he said, there was not a person in Regina who would not feel the economic effect of that interruption. He neither offered an opinion nor made a suggestion but merely put the matter forward for serious consideration, the absolute necessity for the adoption of a naval policy which he stated to be the only sure means of providing for the adequate protection of the union.

There was wandering in the streets of Toronto lately a homeless man, who at one time held a splendid position, but drink was his downfall. To-day his wife, a cultured woman, works out by the day, endeavoring to support herself and little family. Think of it, you wives and mothers, who have homes of comfort and all that makes life worth living, what it would be to you to be deprived of these and forced to face the wash tub for an existence, as this poor wife has to do today?

But this home which was made a hell on earth through strong drink—as every drunkard's is—may be made into a heaven upon earth, as many have been made, as a result of the Neal Treatment. Three days only—the wonder of it—to effect a cure and make the victim of strong drink a new man, physically, morally and mentally.

We undertake to guarantee to effect a cure of the Drink Habit in Three Days, no matter whether the patient is a hard and constant drinker, social tippler, or goes on occasional sprees. Are you interested in a poor fellow going down, down, through the curse of drink? Then bring your influence to bear on him and bring him to the Neal Institute for treatment, drunk or sober, and we will undertake to remove the awful appetite for strong drink and deliver him to you a new man.

Here is an opportunity for REFORMATION SOCIETIES for INEBRIATES or any institution for the reformation of the drunkard, to test our ability to change the hard drinker into a new man, physically and mentally, in THREE DAYS' treatment.

We invite these Societies or any institution interested in the poor drunkard and the problem of dealing with him, to send us for treatment any victim of the drink habit, it makes no difference how much enslaved, and we guarantee to effect a cure in each and every case. Can you spend your money to better advantage or in a way that will bring in greater returns than in redeeming these victims of strong drink and giving back to their families kind fathers, brothers, husbands, and to the country most desirable citizens?

ACTOR SHOT WOUND ON THE STAGE

The Dangers of Using Cartridges—Wad in Wound.

The stage shooting tragedy at the Castle Theatre involved the death of Mr. Wilson, aged thirty-four, an Noel-street, Islington, was inquired into on Tuesday by coroner, Mr. Wilson. The part of the hero in the play "The Woman Conquers" was being performed on Bank Holiday, when the tragedy occurred. In the course of the play, Wilson was to be shot by a villain. A wad was noticed in the flesh.

Eva Trevenna, an actress, street, Islington, who nursed him until he was taken to Northern Hospital, said on Tuesday that the cartridges were not the should be. He stated that only three feet away from the villain, the actor who was shot.

Dr. Pain who was called immediately after the accident, said he found a wad in the left shoulder-blade. He asked if he probed for another, and replied that he did not. The wound was started bleeding. Wilson's death was a tragedy. The suggestion that the wad was in the wound was not seen by a medical man.

Did he treat the matter, was treated very lightly. It was thought that the wad was in the chest. He had a hole in the back of his head. He thought the gun must have fired at close range.

Richard Shellabear, who employed by Messrs. Gamble, gave evidence of the shooting. He was a blank.

The coroner: Do you carry a gun?—Perfectly where. Car should be pointed the gun at any person. Mr. A. Elgood (for the defence) said that the rifle fired from a gun was the wad with nearly force as it would shot.

Yet you sell these cartridges?—As blanks, yes, but he knew they were not. The connection with the stage. Have you seen blank half this size with only cardboard to keep the wad? Well with a thick wad, planned that they got with a thin wad, got out.

Warning Unnecessary. Mr. Tristram Beresford.
