CHORUS OF DISAPPROVAL

A great chorus of condemnation arises from voters over the wording of the prohibition referendum ballot. Objection taken to the wording by the prohibition forces when it was first announced, was without effect. That the objection was well taken is a declaration now heard on every side. Ontario and other provinces where the vote is still to be taken should insist on a change. That the ballot was misunderstood is a statement oft repeated. The referendum is for the purpose of obtaining a declaration from the people as to their wishes regarding prohibition of the use of liquor as a beverage. Any confusion caused by ambiguous wording is to be carefully avoided. The fact that the ballot has been used is not sufficient ground for continuing to use it.

A KING IS DEAD

Announcement of the death of King Alexander of Greece is followed by an intimation that the throne will be an intimation that the throne will be son of former King Constantine. The King is dead—long live the King! No mention is made of former Crown Prince George who was passed over in the original search for a successor to the throne Constantine was forced to abdicate. Presumably the same objections are held which resulted in his rejection in the first instance.

Because of his pro-German activities the Allies brought about the downfall of King Constantine and induced him to name his second son as successor, Constantine going to Switzerland to reside. Alexander justified the confidence reposed in him, and though at first he seemed to carry out the policies which caused his father's downfall, no less an authority than Premier Venizelos paid tribute to his patriotism. His untimely end will no doubt give rise to a succession of stories similar to the one already circulated that his illness was due to activity on the part of his enemies in causing a pet to be inoculated with rabies in the hope that it would implant the fatal virus. Though nothing is impossible, acceptance of such reports as facts can well be delayed until substantiated.

Because of the absence of Prince Paul from Greece it is intimated that a regency will be established and in the interval a council of Cabinet Ministers will rule the land.

That the new King of Greece, if a King is chosen, will govern with the same wisdom as Alexander, is the wish of all interested in the welfare of the world.

BACK ON THE JOB

It began with the craze for dancing about a year before the World War opened. Dancing had always had devotees—it has enjoyed popularity for ten thousand years—but this was a new kind of popularity. Suddenly all divisions of society went crazy at the heels. People danced at breakfast between the oatmeal and bacon and eggs; danced at luncheon while the soup was going down and the roast beef was coming in. They danced at afternoon teas, danced at dinner between courses, they danced between the close of the theatre and the opening of the bedroom door; danced on Sundays to celebrate victory at golf, or to lumber up after a long automobile ride. They danced at the Ritz and Bellevue, says an exchange, and they also danced in less pretentious places where population swarmed. Some of the dances were indescribable; all of the music was bang, clang, heiter-kelter jazz.

Boys and girls, old men and women, high, low, jack and the game all danced all caught the craze.

Then the scene shifted and the wild jazz was succeeded by a wilder jazz. Everybody tried to outbid, to outstep everybody else. The dollar shirt of the "dollar a day" man graduated into the $18 silk shirt of the worker who had his dollar an hour pay to get rid of. The homely but healthy potato was advanced on the hotel bill of fare to the old price tag of succulent terrapin. Bread and butter was no longer thrown in as a gift, but charged for. The "service" charge made its appearance; the "tip" outgrew all old time limits. Everybody was buying everything, chaffy what they did not want and had never thought of buying in days before the "jag" era dawned. We had patriotic "jags" and overworked and over-subscribed business "jags" during which we overtraded and overgambled. Good excesses and bad excesses, but always and in everything the picture was overdrawn.

That was the "jag" era. Alcohol is not only the intoxicant. We had use of all the others. Now the war is over. Our pleasure love which ran mad in the "jag" era; gambling, that ran wild in the "jag" era, have come to the inevitable end, with new proof of the old truth, "they who dance must pay the piper."

What next? Why, after "jazz" and "jag" we come back to the "job," back to the good old plan expressed in the phrase "In the sweat of his face man shall earn his bread," earn his bread first, with a possibility of a terrapin afterwards; but earn his bread, and earn bread or buying powers for somebody else.

It's back on the "job," back on the job with brain and brawn, with mind and soul. It is up to each one of us to play the grand old game, according to the grand old rules recorded in the Ten Commandments and the multiplication table. We've "jazzed" and "jagged" long enough; let's get back on the "job" and stay there.

THE KIEL INCIDENT

German naval officers apparently are bent on showing the world that the armistice agreement existing between Germany and the United States is merely another "scrap of paper." The recent Kiel incident can be explained in no other light.

The commander of the destroyer, Broome, waiting under orders for the coming of United States cruiser, must have been unpleasantly surprised when his request for "merrings" in the Kiel harbor limits was refused by the German admiralty representatives.

Surprise at the curt reply necessarily gave way to indignation when he learned that the negative answer was supplemented by a motion that should the destroyer fail to clear the harbor at once she would be fired upon.

The discourtesy of the German admiralty office synchronizes with the taking over by the United States of the largest vessel formerly in the possession of the German marine fleets.

The mailed fist habit has evidently taken such root in German official circles that despite the resumption of diplomatic relations with all the countries who took arms against that common enemy, Germany is not yet able to realize that threats of deeds of violence are out of harmony with the promises of good faith given after her breathless—"Hold. Enough!"—uttered late in the year of 1918.

Germany is slow to learn the meaning of "play fair," and until she gives evidence that she has grasped the idea and intends to guide her diplomatic relations on such grounds there is need of a vigilant observation of her "moves."

The merited suspicion which has been so long as she continues to show sporadic signs of return to theories and practices which have brought about her world discredit.

ILLUMINATING FIGURES

Sir Henry Drayton, Minister of Finance and Chairman of the Tariff Commission, has made public a tabulation showing in what proportion Income Tax was assessed last year on incomes derived in 1918 among those engaged in different occupations. The figures which are reproduced in another column, are both interesting and instructive, particularly in view of the interest in direct methods of taxation as a means for supplying public revenue, rather than the indirect methods now generally employed.

The tabulation shows that, contrary to general expectations, those classed as employees were both the most numerous and their total assessment the greatest. There were 37,388 employees assessed and they were forced to pay on an assessment of $5,606,759, contributing a total of 31 per cent. of the amount. Mechanics were the next greatest in number but 20,445 of them only supplied 1.3 per cent. of the total which was second to the 988 engineers who were both the lowest in numbers and contributed the smallest total. Manufacturers, though few in number supplied 8.6 per cent. of the assessment while 6,493 agriculturists were only assessed $402,970, which was 2.2 per cent. of the total.

The tabulation may supply one of the reasons for the popularity of direct methods of taxation among those who subscribe to the platform issued by the Canadian Council of Agriculture. The tabulation indicates that some of them may be classed among those who favor the suggestion to "let George do it." Taxation which hits the other fellow is always the most popular kind though it would be unfair and unjust to attribute such motives to the earnest men who have drafted the platform already referred to.

CANNON HEENEY TO ADDRESS UNION OF MUNICIPALITIES

Rev. Canon Heenev, M.A., President of the Children's Aid Society of Manitoba, will be one of the principal speakers before the Union of Manitoba Municipalities convention which gathers here on November 30th. The Rev. Canon Heenev is said to be a splendid speaker and his presence before the convention will add considerably to the strength of the program.

TEA

We have purchased 10,000 pounds of first picking Broken Orange Pekoe Tea for our Fall trade. This tea was bought in July and is coming direct from Ceylon to Brandon. It takes two months for tea to come from Ceylon to Brandon and it should reach us in the next two weeks. We are offering you here the best buy in tea that we have had since before the war. We have already orders on file for some 3,000 to 4,000 pounds of this particular tea, and we are going to give you a chance to put in your winter's supply along with the other orders already hooked—and on the orders which we receive before this shipment reaches us we are going to give the advantage of our good buy. We save 17c per pound on this shipment by buying such a large quantity and in bringing it direct from Ceylon, and it will more than pay you to send in an order to us for your year's requirements. And after you have used it for two weeks, if you are not satisfied that it is the best tea deal that you have ever had we will refund the entire purchase price to you. Prices for arrival of shipment only:
